With the British Army in France, Aug. 8.— Where the tanks and the armoured car batteries pressed forward in the rolling country there was much agitation among the enemy. A report came back that a British tank, probably one of the fast little whippets, had been seen chasing a frightened German General up the road. But the enemy General was not alone in the direction he was going. Observers reported considerable columns of enemy transport going eastward in a hurry during the middle of the day.

land in Dutch waters where the crew was interned and the airplane destroyed.

Line Extended.

Canadian Press:

LONDON, Aug. 10.—The new attack by the French has extended the battle line some sixteen miles further to the south-east in the Montdidier area. In this movement the French scored an advance of four miles in six hours. To the north the important junction of Chaulnes is now quite untenable for the Germans, as it is well within the fire of British field guns. The 100 guns added to the 200 previously captured by the Allies were taken by the French in this morning's fighting. The opinion in London to-day was that the enemy could not now possibly hold any sort of line until he reached the Somme and the canal from Nesle to Noyon. That would make a maximum retreat of twenty miles. Roughly speaking, the Allied advance in two days on a front of twenty miles, has been twelve miles.

Heavy Pressure.

PARIS, Aug. 10. —The German retirement is under heavy pressure from French armies. Behind Von Hutier is a country that was completely devastated during the German evacuation in the sprin gof 1917 and which wa sagain overrun during the German offensive in March of this year. The territory offers little opportunity for formation of a defensive line for an army in full retreat. It was in this region that virtually every tree was felled by the Germans last March so as to take from the British and French armies any cover that could be afforded. Between the lines now being evacuated by Von Hutier and the Hindenburg line, eastward of Nesle and Ham are old trench systems running from Noyon westward through Lassigny and thence northward to Roye. These trenches are now somewhat dilapidated.

A New Attack.

Canadian Press:

LONDON, May 10.— French troops attacked at 4 o'clock this morning on a line between Montdidier and the River Oise on a front of approximately 16 miles and at ten a.m. had scored an advance of four miles, according to news recived shortly after noon to-day. The French line at that hour ran Faverolles, Piennes, Rollot, Cuvilly, Ressons-Surs-Matz and Vignemont. This line puts Montdidier behind the French line.

Von utler's retreat from Montdidier was cut off when the French captured Faverolles. The German position along the Montdidier-Roye road is precarious.

The retreat of Von Hutier's army is showing traces of utmost haste. Much war material is being left behind. German rear guards are fighting desperately.

Military News

The vitcory of the C.A.M.C. of Barriefield Camp over the famous Havana Red Sox at Gananoque on Wednesday afternoon was the cause of much rejoicing in the city and amp among the fans when the result was known. It was a splendid achievement.

To Watertown.

Lieut.-Col. Gardiner has been in Watertown, N.Y., to arrange for wounded soldiers to go to the Taylor Convalescent Home. The medical officer found everything in readiness. The house has been fitted with the necessary furniture and cots, a manager is in the field, help has been employed and there are food supplies on hand.

Canadians in Watertown.

Between ten and fifteen wounded Canadian soldiers arrived in Watertown, N. Y., on Thursday morning and were transferred to the Taylor residence at 241 Clinton street, which has been ocnverted into a convalescent hospital.

THAT EXTRA CENT.

Coin Long Denounced Comes Into Its Own.

The cent, like corn flour and George Creel, is coming into its own as a result of war. Formerly scorned by all except the needy or the thrifty as inconvenient and of little practical use, because nearly all prices were made in units of five, it is now, perhaps, the most used and useful of coins. Many articles of common consumption which formerly cost 5 or 10 cents, now cost 6 or 11 cents. So with things which could formerly be bought for multiples of the 5-cent piece, from 10 cents to $1. All require the odd cent now. Chewing gum, cigars, cigarettes, theatre tickets are no longer obtainable at even prices. The 1-cent piece, instead of being a nuisance, is convenient and useful.

The exaltation of the cent should be educational. We have long been contemptuous of its merits and usefulness, and have suffered accordingly. When an article should have been sold for 4 cents the seller knew it was just as easy to get 5 cents, so he asked that. When it was worth 9 cents it was sold for 10, and so on up the line. The rule generally worked only one way. Not often, or for long, was the buyer likely to get an article worth 6 cents for 5 cents. The American contempt for the odd cent has for years been a heavy tax on the consumer. Since the beginning of the war, odd cent prices have grown more popular. Prejudice has gradually been overcome. The result is beneficial. Prices ought to be governed, for the protection of both producer and consumer, by the cost of manufacture with a fair profit added. Such a price will not always work out in fives or multiples thereof.

Mr. W. S. Fallis is Appointed Manager

Mr. W. S. Fallis, who has for a number of years, with headquarters in Winnipeg, been western manager of the Sherwin-Williams Company of Canada, Limited, has just been appointed managing director of the company. Mr. Fallis will remove to Montreal at once to take up his new duties on the first of September. It is a well-merited promotion, and we prophesy that the Sherwin-Williams Company will grow and prosper still further under his able management.

Mr. Fallis started with the company in 1899 as travelling salesman in Western Ontario. In 1900 he was transferred to the Maritime Provinces and Newfoundland. In 1902 he was appointed special representative to the West India Islands, and opened trade in Barbadoes, British Guiana, Bermuda and Trinidad. In 1903 the company decided to test the European market, and Mr. Fallis was selected as special representative, with headquarters in London, England. This was the first attempt made by a Canadian or an American paint manufacturer to establish trade in the Old Countries, and Mr. Fallis opened trade throughout the British Isles, France, Belgium, Switzerland Italy, Spain, Norway and Sweden, and other European countries, with such success that later the company provided manufacturing facilities for European trade in London, England In 1905 he returned to Canada, and in 1907 was appointed sales manager at Winnipeg. In 1912, on the formation of the Sherwin-Williams Company of Canada, Limited, he was appointed manager of the Western district, the territory being from Fort William to the Coast, with headquarters at Winnipeg. Knowing Canada from ocean to ocean, he is, therefore, well qualified, from his experience, to take over his new position.

Fierce Storm Does Great Damge in Vicinity of Ottawa.

OTTAWA, Aug. 8.— A hailstorm of great ferocity passed west of the city between six and seven o'clock on Wednesday evening, levelling crops uprooting trees and carrying away fences and roofs of buildings.

The size of the hailstones that fell in some places was the cause of much wonder, many residents declaring them the largest that have ever fallen in this district. J. H. Murphy, of Westboro, said he found some stones on his property that measured 8 1-2 inches in circumference.

BEN GREET

HAS RECOVERED FROM INJURIES.

Was Temporarily Blinded by Flying Glass.

Been Greet need only be pronounced for on's mind immediately to revert to Stratford-On-Avon:

Mr. Greet is without a doubt the greatest living authority on the English Drama. And when we say that Ben Greet with his celebrated actors are coming to Peterborough to play for your benefit that comedy that is known wherever the English tongue is spoken as the greatest comedy of comedies, that one written by the "Barred of Stratford-On-Avon, and the Immortal Shakespeare."

The Ben Greet Players appeared at one hundred and ten Shantaufuas last year, and everywhere met with the greatest enthusiasm. The audience frequently taxed the utmost capacity of the great auditorium tent. And without a doubt the great tent in Peterborough will also be taxed to its utmost capacity because nothing less than Shakespeare's the "Comedy of Errors," will be put in here, with special scenery, senic affects and costumes depicting the famous characters as nearly as possible as Shakespeare conceived them.

From Indianapolis:—"They are a real hit, good entertainers, both vocally and instrumentally."

Be sure and get your ticket at once, otherwise you may find difficulty in the way. A $2.00 ticket admits you to every performance during Chautauqua Week, there will be three a day.

PETERBOROUGH CLAIMS FOR INSURANCE

This week's issue of the Monetary Times shows $63,500 paid out in Peterborough in insurance payments during 1914. Montreal still heads the list with the largest number of payments. Mr. Thomas P. McCormick, the biscuit manufacturer, of London, Ont., has the largest payment—76,125. Mr. Richard H. Bonnyacstle, of Campbellford, had a claim of $10,000. Baltimore shows $13,500 and Fraserville $12,500.

OUTDOORS

Signs of approaching autumn begin to multiply. In the fields the harvest operations are in full swing. Reapers rattle through the ripened grain like tanks cutting a wide swath through enemy reserves, leaving prostrate sheaves that suggest the inanimate forms of the inevitable wake of war. Overhead, there are the new activities that denote forthcoming departures. Fledglings of a few weeks ago have found their wings, and the first flocks of wild ducks have left their breeding grounds in test flights for the coming migration, following some many-summered veteran in their fluttering V formations. In the gardens the gladioli have unsheathed their brilliant spikes, and the sun flower's drooping head is turned away from the sun.

Along the country roads the blue sailors fade; the thistle tops, frowsy and full of seed, sway with the gold finches and their late hatched broods; the golden rod splashes the indentations of the snake fence with its saffron clusters; buttercups languish, the ox-eyed daisies have grown tattered, a host of other flowers have shed their glory, and with their seed have fulfilled their brief and humble destiny.

The glory of summer's pageant of the flowers is departed, and the earlier twilights denote the descent from the year's zenith. Gay petals fall like sands in the hour glass counting the passing moment with unfailing fidelity to the brief season they adorn. It is a process old as the hills, as beautiful and as grim, relentless and in a sense baffling and inscrutable. And yet it is eternally new and absorbing to the simple and sympathetic bystander who greets the way side flowers as ever returning friends with their perennial mission of brightening the dustly paths and softening the asperities of inescapable contacts.

The fields are as unstudied and unsearched, by those who need their balm as are the stars. Few there are to hear that various language which "she speaks to him who in the love of Nature holds communion with her visible forms." Summer is passing, but the year has yet a store of riches of golds and browns, and the hectic colours that follow the first frosts. But in the almost imperceptible change of the season's summer dissolves her vividness of colour and light in the milder brush of the golden rod and in the soft, bland air of the earliest days of autumn.

THE SITUATION IN PETERBORO

Peterborough Telephone Operators Secured Increase a Short Time Ago.

Following the announcement that the telephone operators of Toronto were discussing the advisability of taking action to secure an increased wage schedule, inquiries made in the city elicited the information that nothing of this kind was being considered by the operators here. Some time ago, is was explained, the local operators were granted a general wage increase and the minimum wage slightly increased for first term operators. This, it was stated, was necessary in order to maintain an adequate staff. In spite of the increased wage scale, however, much trouble has been experienced in securing sufficient help and at the present time very young girls are being accepted for service.

BIG FISH CAUGHT IN WHITE LAKE.

Captain E. B. Lansier, War Department, Bureau of Aircraft Production, Finance Division, New York City, who has been summering at Viamede, landed a 6-pound bass on July 18, and later, accompanied by Mr. E. A. Field, of Pittsburgh, Pa., and Jack Thompson, his guide, a 5 3-4-pound small-mouth black bass in White Lake. The latter fish measures 20¼ inches, and is 15½ inches around the centre. Captain Lansier has had both bass mounted by Chas. Gordon, of Lakefield, and with Mr. Leonard's (American Consul) permission, is taking the trophy to New York.

LORD RHONDDA LOVED EMPIRE

Canadian Singers Tell of His Hospitality.

TOURED BRITISH ISLES

The Kindness of His Treatment of the Victoria College Glee Club Was Typical of the Late Food Controller of Great Britain, Who Was a Leading Liberal.

THE late Lord Rhondda was well known in this country before the war as he always showed a great interest in Canada. He was as ardent in his love of the Empire as he was in his Liberalism, and regarded our Dominion as part of a great federation of free nations. He never thought of us as "a colony." He and Lloyd George were the two outstanding men that Wales gave to help save Great Britain in the greatest crisis of their national history. Both these extraordinarily successful organizers were Welshmen and Liberals. At least one

LORD RHONDDA.

Canadian organization has pleasant memories of Lord Rhondda as a host. His love of the citizens of the Overseas Dominions was never displayed in more kindly fashion than during the tour of the Victoria College Glee Club of Toronto, which visited the British Isles on the eve of hostilities in 1914. For a day he made the Canadians his guests at his country seat near Cardiff.

David A. Thomas was not Food Controller then, and it was with great glee that he watched the embryo lawyer and Methodist preacher empty every available bottle of stone ginger while the magnate and the notables of Cardiff and Newport quaffed other beverages at his great dinner in honor of the forty choristers from the Dominion.

Although plain Mr. Thomas then, the deceased Lord Rhondda was known by reputation to his guests as a man of great consequence and they came in great trepidation but remained to "sing their heads off," as they expressed it, for the great friend of Canada. He took them in motor cars all over the countryside and city and to the mines. They descended one of the pits and sang for the Cambrian men at work down there.

All unconsciously he was cementing the ties of Empire, for when the glee men hurried out of Germany to escape internment they brought back to Canada a memory of the "Welsh Coal King" as the man who gave them the best day of their lives. Before now the club would have returned to sing again for him and his Welshmen, if they had not gone back by twos and threes as volunteers to fight, and some of them to die, for the Empire on whose behalf he has now given his life.

Iceland Wants Supplies.

Iceland is feeling the pinch of a shortage of supplies and has sent a commission to London to make an agreement with the Entente nations for an exchange of commodities. They ask for a renewal of the commercial arrangement between Iceland and Great Britain which had been in effect since 1916.

In connection with the negotiation, representatives of France, Italy and the United States have also been appointed to attend the conferences.

The island produces only fish, mutton, wool and sheepskins. Such commodities as cereals and other foodstuffs, as well as all manufactured goods have to be imported. The main object of the agreement is, therefore, to provide reasonable rations for the Icelanders in exchange for which, as well as fishing facilities in allied ports, Iceland undertakes to sell to the Allies her products for a certain fixed and agreed price.

The agreement, therefore, is purely a matter of exchange of allied and Icelandic products, and has no political significance whatever.

A recent attempt of the German press to stir up trouble in Denmark, by suggesting that Great Britain is spending money on the island with the object of separating Iceland from Denmark, to which she politically belongs although she enjoys practically home rule, is declared to be without foundation in fact.

Sixty-five Thousand Enemy Prisoners Captured By Allies Under Foch

Foe Staff Dazed When the Allies Struck—Unified Action, Under Great Frenchman, Scored Great Triumph Over Foe.

800 GERMAN GUNS TAKEN

PARIS, Aug. 13.—Unified action of the allies under Marshal Foch has so increased their efficiency that besides driving the Germans from the Marne salient and now from Amiens, they have now brought the total number of prisoners up to over 65,000 and guns from 600 to 800. The Germans were so worried by the harassing tactics of the allies on the Amiens salient that before August 8th they had withdrawn their troops from west of the River Avre near Moreuil. Probably this was preliminary to thinning their lines preparatory to a deeper withdrawal, because their position in the salient was most unenviable.

Foch Didn't Wait.

The Germans were on the defensive and they had not fortified the positions. Marshal Foch did not await the foreshadowed withdrawal, however, but struck with lightning rapidity and took the Germans totally by surprise. That portion of the allied advance between Montdidier and Amiens now threatens to jam the German forces into the curve of the Somme where the marshy river turns south. Therefore, the first day's advance has found the Germans withdrawing more rapidly in the neighbourhood of the south bank of the Somme, although everywhere the allies' advance triumphantly broke the German line.

The cavalry, accompanied by tanks, outstripped the infantry line, and reached the outskirts of Rosieres by the evening of the 8th. Later news showed that the allies' forces were approaching Chaulnes, near Lihons. This allied success put the German forces between Montdidier and Roye in a pocket, with the result that the Germans were forced to withdraw immediately from Montdidier with heavy losses.

Hun Staff Dazed.

The German staff, with plans upset, appear so far incapable of counteracting the rapid moves of the allies, although divisions of reinforcements have been brought up. They succeeded in regaining minor positions between the Avre and the Somme. Military authorities feel assured that they will drive the Germans from the whole sector south of the Somme between Noyon and Peronne, relieving the pressure north of Paris and forcing the abandonment of the two salients south-west of Peronne, which the Germans sacrificed so much to get.

The lines now run from Morlancourt, north of the Somme, to six kilometres (three and three-fourths miles) west of Chaulnes, six kilometers west of Roye, ten kilometers (six and one-fourth miles) east of Montdidier, and in rapid sweep east to eight kilometers (nearly five miles) west of Lassigny. The question now is whether Gen. Ludendorff will try to hold temporarily on the line Bray-sur-Somme-Chaulnes-Lassigny.

It would seem necessary for the Germans to hold this line in order to save big guns, if the latter have not already been evacuated. Certainly the tide has turned and the people here are beginning to realize that the German army is being driven and is definitely on the defensive.

Two Miles From Lassigny.

LONDON, Aug. 15.—The allies have captured the town of Gury, on the right flank of the Somme battlefront, according to news from the front this evening.

On the north of the battlefront the French have not yet reached the rest of Lassigny Massif, possession of which would put the Germans both to the north and to the south in uncomfortable pockets.

The French War Office announced that the French had reached the outskirts of Gury. This town is an important point on the Lassigny Massif, within two miles of Lassigny itself, which is the immediate French objective in this sector, possession of which would be likely to cause a considerable retirement by the Germans both to the east and the west on this end of the battle line.

CHOOSE THE RIGHT BOOKS.

A Serious Percentage of Modern Publications Not Worth Reading.

If any person given to reading were honestly to keep a register of all the printed stuff that he or she consumes in a year—all the idle tales of which the very names and the story are forgotten in a week, the bookmaker's prattle about nothing at so much a sheet, the fugitive trifling about silly things and empty people, the memoirs of the unmemorable, and lives of those who never really lived at all—of what a mountain of rubbish would it be the catalogue!

The vast proportion of books are books that we shall never be able to read. A serious percentage of books are not worth reading at all. The really vital books for us we also knew to be a very trifling portion of the whole. And yet we act as if every book were as good as any other, as if it were merely a question of order which we take up first, as if any book were good enough for us, and as if all were alike honorable, precious, and satisfying.

Books are not wiser than men; the true books are not easier to find than the true men; the bad books or the vulgar books are not less obtrusive and not less ubiquitous than the bad or vulgar men are everywhere; the art of right reading is as long and difficult to learn as the art of right living.

As a man aimlessly wandering about in a crowded city is of all men the most lonely, so he who takes up many is certain to meet but few that are worth knowing. Now this danger is one to which we are especially exposed in this age. Our high pressure life of emergencies, our whirling industrial organization or disorganization, have brought us in this (as in most things) their peculiar difficulties and drawbacks.

In almost everything, vast opportunities and gigantic means of multiplying our products bring with them new perils and troubles which are often at first neglected. Our huge cities, where wealth is piled up and the requirements and appliances of life extended beyond the dreams of our forefathers, seem to breed in themselves new forms of squalor, disease, blights, or risks to life. So the enormous multiplicity of modern books is not altogether favorable to the knowing of the best.

Boy's Remark Got Results.

Bob had been downtown with his mother shopping and was tired when they boarded a homeward bound street car. Every seat was occupied. After a few minutes' silent survey Bob leaned up against his mother with a tired sigh and said: "Well, mother, I guess this is seatless day for us." Even newspaper camouflage couldn't resist this. Several seats were quickly vacated.

MILK FLOW DECREASING

Flies, Drought and Heat Cause of Trouble.

Suggestions for Most Profitable Care of Dairy Cows and Calves—August Ploughing and September Cross Ploughing Kills Grubs and Worms In Old Sod.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

DURING the extremely hot weather, cows and calves frequently suffer, sometimes needlessly, from three things—effects of high temperature, lack of water, and from torment by flies.

A great mistake was made in the older parts of Ontario, when practically all the trees were cut down, thus leaving no shade for cattle and other live stock. When the late Prof. Brown was in charge of the Ontario Agricultural College farm and live stock, he planted small groves of trees on various parts of the College farm, and no more pleasant sight may be seen than that of the College herd lying in the shade among these trees on a hot day. These groves make the fields where located rather awkward to work, but the cattle certainly enjoy themselves among the trees. On a live stock and dairy farm, while it may not be advisable to plant trees in the middle of a field, it certainly will pay to have them in as many places as possible, where they do not interfere with the working of the land.

In the meantime, on dairy farms where no shade is available in the regular pasture field, sometimes a wood-lot can be utilised for the stock during the heat of the day, though they may damage the young trees to some extent. Another plan is to keep the cattle in a darkened stable for part of the day. This means a good deal of extra labor cleaning the stable, and keeping the cows clean, and under present labor conditions may not be practicable on many farms. However, where there is the necessary labor available and particularly where cows are receiving soiling or silage feed to supplement the pasture, the feeding in the stable may well take place during the day and the cows be kept inside while it is very hot. This plan also reduces worry from flies, when the windows are covered to make the stable dark.

Water Necessary for Comfort and Milk Production.

Cows frequently suffer from lack of sufficient water. As a boy, the writer remembers driving cattle to "Big Crick," in Brant County, during dry spells. The cows were nearly famished when they reached the "Crick" and would drink until they looked like bursting. By the time they reach home, after walking for a mile-and-a-half over a dusty road, the cattle were nearly as thirsty as ever.

The only safe source of a sure water supply is a deep well, driven or bored, and having the water pumped by windmill or other sources of power, with a storage tank for emergencies. There is no part of Ontario in which an abundance of water cannot be obtained, if we go deep enough to tap the hidden sources of supply.

No matter how it is obtained, the owner of dairy stock, more especially of cows milking, must supply a large amount of water, else the stock will suffer, which means lessened milk supply, and small cheques from the creamery, cheesery, condensery, or city dealer. Milk consists of about 87½ per cent. water, and this water must come from the drink and feed of the cow. A cow giving 100 lbs. (10 gallons) of milk daily, will drink over 200 lbs. (20 gallons) of water in a day. Cows giving less milk will drink in proportion. Give the cows plenty of water. Young cattle, calves, and hogs also need plenty of clean water in hot weather.

Fly Remedies.

There are several good fly remedies on the market. Where there is no time to make one, the purchase of a patent fly-killer or repellent, is advisable. These are usually applied daily, or twice a day with a small hand sprayer.

A home-made remedy may consist of one-half gallon fish oil, or any old grease, one-half pint coal oil, and four tablespoonfuls of crude carbolic acid, cresol, etc. Mix thoroughly. This will be sufficient for twenty-five cows and may be applied with a brush or cloth. If there is no rain it will keep the flies off for several days. Milkers must be careful not to get this on the hands, nor allow hairs to drop into the milk pail, as it will taint the milk. It is safer to apply after milking.—Prof. H. H. Dean, Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph.

What About Seed Wheat This Year?

Good seed of the most desirable varieties of fall wheat is sure to be scarce this autumn. The most of the winter wheat in Canada is grown in Ontario, and the acreage sown in this province last autumn was less than usual. Over fifty per cent. of the crop was winter killed. In numerous instances the wheat which was not ploughed was re-sown with other grains either over the whole areas or in patches. Owing to the scarcity of labor it may be difficult to thresh the grain from the good fields between the dates of harvesting and seeding. Those growers who have old wheat of good quality should save it carefully for seed purposes. Special efforts should be made to thresh as much of the good wheat of this year's growing at as early a date as possible. Farmers having more seed than is required for home use or for sale to neighbors would undoubtedly receive a good demand by advertising in either the local or the agricultural papers. Tests should be made of the germination of both the old and the new wheat. Strict economy of winter wheat for seed purposes this autumn is essential.—Dr. G. A. Zavitz, Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph.

THE CANADIANS ADVANCED TWELVE MILES IN TWO DAYS

Line Now Held on Somme Front is Nearly 10,000 Yards Wide—Smallest Casualties Corps Has Ever Had, Though Results are Best.

CAPTURE 7,000 HUNS

LONDON, Aug. 13.—Speaking to the Canadian Associated Press yesterday Overseas Minister of Militia Sir Edward Kemp said that the official reports covering Canadian operations until nine o'clock on Saturday morning showed that the achievements of the Canadians in the present offensive were the greatest in the crops' history. Their advance on August 8 and 9 was twelve miles. They went farther in those two days than the Germans progressed in the first two days of their March offensive. The frontage of the Canadian attack on August 8 was 7,500 yards, while the line held yesterday morning was upwards of 10,000 yards wide, with fighting of open character.

The prisoners captured numbered more than 7,000, in addition to 1 guns and hundreds of machine guns.

The first day the Canadians were opposed by four German divisions, every battalion of which was identified.

All four Canadian divisions, said Sir Edward, played a part in the attack. In addition, the cavalry performed brilliant work, being on Saturday morning well in advance of the infantry and in touch with headquarters by wireless. The corps commander yesterday sent a message to Sir Edward testifying to the outstanding work of the corps, its fine spirit and morale.

Of casualties, Sir Edward Kemp said: "They are the smallest by a long way of any previous major operation in which the corps have been engaged, notwithstanding that the accomplishments in the present battle are the most gratifying in the corps history.

Sir Edward sent the following message to Sir Arthur Currie:

"My heartiest congratulations to yourself, to corps, and other attached Canadian units, including cavalry and motor machine-gun brigades, on greatest success in history. Canadians have more than maintained their past splendid record. Canada will be prouder than ever of them and their glorious achievements."

The New Line.

It is now possible to say that the Canadian force, having secretly taken over that part of the Australian line running south of the railway at Villers-Bretonneux to the Avre, reached on the first day of the offensives their objectives at fourteen thousand yards, and that on Saturday evening they had attained the line marked out for them several thousand yards further on.

Originally this line covered a width of twenty miles, in which the Canadians and the Australians, still side by side, fought in the centre. On the Australian left, an English force was set a very hard task between the Somme and the Ancre, where progress was necessarily more difficult and fighting extremely stiff. The French south of the Canadian line had similar difficulties, but have now greatly widened the front of attack by extending their operations south-east of Montdidier. The very brilliant results they thus far have attained are the happiest augury for the future.

The Woman Who Changed

By JANE PHELPS

A PLEASANT SURPRISE

CHAPTER CXLII.

The morning mail was, as usual, laid beside George's plate at breakfast. He glanced through it, then tossed one thick envelope over to me.

"An invitation to something!" he remarked as he picked up the morning paper.

"Why—it is! look!" I handed it to him. "It isn't an invitation; it's an announcement. Julia Collins married that Chicago man yesterday.

"Sensible girl, not to have any fuss over it," he said as he took the engraved sheet from me. "So many widows aren't satisfied unless they go through the same performance, the second time they are married, that they did the first. But Julia always had perfect taste in all such things. I hope she will be happy with this chap. She wasn't happy with Collins. He was a cad."

"Perhaps that was what made her so cynical at times?" I said, ready to make excuses for her, now that I no longer feared her.

"I shouldn't wonder. I see they are going to live in Chicago."

"Yes—Madge Loring will miss her dreadfully. They are inseparable."

"She will be missed all round," then, "I wish you liked Mrs. Loring better, Helen. She is a charming woman, and would be company for you, I feel that you are too much alone for one so young. Mrs. Reeves can't be with you all the time."

HELEN MAKES A PROMISE.

"I know she can't, although I should like to have her. She is so sweet, George, when you know her well, and so sensible. She talks almost like Mrs. Sexton, at times. But I will try to like Mrs. Loring; I expect I disliked her principally because she know more than I did."

"That's a brave thing to say," George looked up quickly, "not many women would acknowledge it."

"Not many women are George Howard's wife," I laughed, to hide any pleasure in his remark.

"I hope not! I'm not at all inclined to polygamy. But I am in earnest about Madge Loring. If you learn to know her, you will like her."

"So Mrs. Sexton told me. By the way, George, she is very ill. She thinks she is going to die."

"She has been ill for years. She is the bravest soul I know. I imagine, Helen, that when you first met her, as well as others of our set, that you thought, because they were society people — charming hostesses — past masters in the art of pleasing—that they were soulless. A woman does not necessarily lack the other virtues because she is born to a social position which requires that she be tactful and attractive — although that seems to be the opinion of many good people," he stopped a moment, then, "I am sorry about Mrs. Sexton. I will order some flowers sent to her—no, I will send them here, and you take the car and go over with them. She will appreciate the attention, even though she may be too ill to see you. I will drop her a note from the office."

George was always that way. He always did the nice thing. I must learn to be as thoughtful, as he, I thought, as I watched him from the window.

A WEDDING GIFT.

"Shall we send Mrs. Collins a gift?" I asked George, that night, at dinner.

"Yes. I have known Julia all my life. What shall we send?"

It was very unusual for him to defer to me. Generally he did what he thought best about things.

"I saw a wonderful oval mirror in Harrington's yesterday. I never saw a lovelier thing. It was expensive; but not too much so for you to give her, under the circumstances." (I could afford to be generous; she was to live in Chicago!)

"How much?"

"One hundred and fifty dollars But it was exquisite."

"I'll look in at it, in the morning. If I like it, we won't look further."

It was the constant recurrence of little things like this, that made me happier than I ever had been since I married George. He was beginning to treat me more as an equal, instead of as a child who needed either teaching or punishment. Of course, it wasn't all sunshine even now. But the clouds were lighter—were more easily brushed aside with the passing of time.

George looked at the mirror and telephoned that he liked it immensely, and asked me to see that it was sent, with a card enclosed. I was delighted that he approved my taste. But it was a really lovely thing, and I had been sure he would like it.

Madge Loring came into the store, while I was attending to it, and was so nice that I took her home in the car. I was determined, now, to make my husband's friends my friends, if it were possible.

"This is very good of you," Mrs. Loring said as we rode along, "I had expected to walk home."

"It is good in you to allow me to set you down," I returned, then, before we separated, we made an engagement to lunch together the next week.

The Duelist's Disease.

Dr. Pean, a Paris physician, was called as a physician to attend a duel One of the adversaries was so cowardly that he ran away after the first shot unhurt. The four seconds, the remaining combatant and the doctor stood looking at each other with embarrassment and discomfiture when Dr. Pean broke the silence by saying gravely, "I know the disease that has suddenly attacked this gentleman." And, taking out his pencil and paper, he drew up a report as follows: "At the first shot Mr. X. was taken with a sudden attack of tachypodia that would not yield to treatment. The seconds therefore, on consultation with the physician, stopped the duel." Thus "honor" was saved.

Thoroughly Base.

An old forger who has served five terms in various penitentiaries and who is now refraining from fancy penmanship in order to enjoy an uninterrupted vacation for a week or twain accords us the following epigram from the depth of his experience:

"I never realized the complete baseness of my nature until one day I found myself unconsciously raising my own check!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Want "Santa Maria."

H. H. Richards and Capt. James Hunt have gone to the Maritime Provinces with a view to making arrangements if possible, to get the replica of Christopher Columbus' flagship, "Santa Maria," back to Chicago, whence it set out four years ago on an educational cruise, and was eventually taken to Prince Edward Island. Owing to shipping facilities being tied up by the war there may be some difficulty in getting the "Santa Maria" to Chicago.

STOMACH TROUBLES ARE DUE TO ACIDITY

Tells Safe, Certain, Speedy, Relief For Acid Indigestion.

So-called stomach troubles, such as indigestion, gas, sourness, stomach-ache, and inability to retain food are in probably nine cases out of ten, simply evidence that excessive secretion of acid is taking place in the stomach causing the formation of gas and acid indigestion

Gas distends the stomach and causes that full oppressive burning feeling sometimes known as heartburn, while the acid irritates and inflames the delicate lining of the stomach. The trouble lies entirely in the excessive development or secretion of acid.

To stop or prevent this souring of the food contents of the stomach and to neutralize the acid and, make it bland and harmless, a teaspoonful of bisurated magnesia, a good and effective corrector of acid stomach, should be taken in a quarter of a glass of hot or cold water after eating or whenever gas, sourness or acidity is felt. This sweetens the stomach and neutralizes the acidity in a few moments and is a perfectly harmless and inexpensive remedy to use.

An antacid, such as bisurated magnesia which can be obtained from any druggist in either powder or tablet form enables the stomach to do its work properly without the aid of artificial digestents. Magnesia comes in several forms so be certain to ask for and take only Bisurated Magnesia which is especially prepared for the above purpose.

A Visit to Anton Lang.

I sat beside Anton Lang in his workroom as his steady hands fashioned things of clay, I ate at table with him and in the evening we pulled up our chairs to the comfortable fireside, where he talked of his country and my country, of the Passion Play and of the war.

I had been skeptical about him until I met him. I wondered if he was self-conscious about his goodness, or if he was a dreamer who could not get down to the realities of this world, or if he had been spoiled by flattery or if piety was part of his profession.

When I finally went from there I felt that I really understood him. His life has been without an atom of reproach, yet he never poses as pious. He has been honored by royalty and men of state, yet he remains simple and unaffected. To play well his role of Christus is the dominating passion of his life. Not the make-up box but his own thoughts must mold his features for the role which has been his in 1890, 1900 and 1910.

The doctrine that "only through hate can the greatest obstacles in life be overcame" has not reached this home.

He spoke to Mr. Curtin of the fabulous offers for a long tour of America which he had refused. "Here I must always work hard and remain poor; there I could quickly have grown rich," he said. "But the Passion Play is not a business. Nearly 300 years ago, when a terrible plague raged over the land, the people of Oberammergau vowed to Almighty God that if he would save their village, they would perform every 10 years in his glory the Passion of his Divine Son. The village was saved and Oberammergau kept its promise."—D. Thomas Curtin in "The Land of Deepening Shadow."

The Word "Lurid."

The word "lurid" is misused by many people as a synonym for "glaring" or "fiery." One speaks in this sense of "lurid" language, "lurid" flames, "lurid" dramas. It is probable that not one person in three knows the real meaning of "lurid." The dictionary defines it as "ghastly, pale, wan, gloomy," which in no way carries out the general and mistaken idea of the word.—New York World.

LAUNCHED INTO SPACE.

Projectiles Mounted Fourteen Miles Into the Air.

If, as reckoned, and as there seems no reason to doubt, the projectiles thrown into Paris by the new German guns from a distance of seventy-four miles mount fourteen miles into the air, they reach further into the vault of blue than any point hitherto attained by human effort. Next comes a "free" balloon that was sent up from Berlin carrying eight automatic instruments to record temperature and air density, a number of years ago. It attained an elevation of eleven and a half miles.

Mainly by the use of such instrument-carrying balloons much has been learned within recent years about the "sea of air" at the bottom of which we dwell. So rapidly does it "thin out as one passes upward through it that no human being can survive for long beyond an elevation of four miles for lack of sufficient oxygen."

Half of the total volume of the atmosphere is below the three-mile level, and its density, roughly speaking, is halved for each three miles of ascent. The air contained in a box three feet cube at sea level weighs twenty ounces; at an elevation of fourteen miles it would weigh less than one ounce.

The highest level ever reached by a human being was attained by Dr. Berson, who, in 1893, voyaged in a balloon to a height of nearly six miles—the elevation of the loftiest clouds, such as we call "mares' tails," which are believed to be composed of snow-crystals or ice-crystals. He was enabled to accomplish this feat by taking a tank of oxygen with him, and his thermometer recorded a temperature of 54 degrees below zero.

The above-mentioned free balloon sent up from Berlin, which was called the Cirrus, noted with its automatic thermometer 75 degrees. Meteorologists are of opinion that at twenty-five miles above the earth's surface the temperature is never less than 200 degrees below zero, and that at fifty miles it is not far from the absolute zero of the outer void of space—527 2-5 degrees below zero.

The highest elevation attained by land was reached in 1892 by W. M. Conway, who scaled the summit of Pioneer Peak, in the Himalayas. It is the loftiest point ever trodden by human foot — nearly 23,000 feet above the level of the sea. But Mount Everest, in the same great backbone of Asia, is more than a mile higher and presumably can never be climbed. There is not enough air on or near its top.

In the upper regions of the sea of air there is not only no air (adequate for human purposes) to breathe, but the cold is such that no warm-blooded creature could survive for a minute. The climate is an eternal winter, its temperature uninfluenced by the warmest rays of the summer sun.

But (supposing that we could survive there for a brief time) let us place ourselves in imagination) at a level of 100 miles above the happy spot where at present it is our privilege to dwell. We look about us, and what do we see?

The blue sky? There is no such thing! The sky is jet-black — the stars scintillating in it with a brilliancy wholly unfamiliar. And how about the sun? It is inconceivably dazzling, but in color it is not yellow or red. It is a brilliant blue. The aspect in which ordinarily it appears to us is due to interference with its blue rays by the atmosphere.

A Floral Chameleon.

A marvelous flower has been discovered in the isthmus of Tehuantepec. Its chief peculiarity is the habit of changing its color during the day. In the morning it is white; when the sun is at its zenith it is red, and at night it is blue. The red, white and blue flower grows on a tree about the size of a guava tree, and only at noon does it give out any perfume.

A Bit Thick.

"The Germans exaggerate their submarine murders as the old settlers exaggerated their fog yarns."

The speaker was a champion flyer. He went on:

"An old settler took a chew and said:

"'The worst fog I ever seen was back in '74. I remember I had to go to the henhouse that night, and the fog was so blame thick I had to get the three hired men to push me through it.'

"'I remember that there '74 fog well,' said the second old settler, 'but it wasn't nothin' to the '63 one. That was a fog! Solid! Why, us boys sat on the fence back of the distillery all that day makin' fog balls an' heavin' 'em at the people that went by.'"

Changed Ideals!

"She's quit trying to land a rich man for a husband."

"Yes. She says she'd pass up a millionaire any time now to marry an officer in the army or the navy."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

True and False

By JESSIE ETHEL SHERWIN

Drake Beaton was a coward and a sneak, but he tried hard to conceal these facts. When the call for troops came he resigned his position and quietly stole away from the town where his name was on the draft list.

"There's no way of ever getting exempted if they ever get me," mused this interesting young man. Cliveden, a pretty village, attracted him. Here there came to this man of little principle and no true sense of honor a magnetic influence he could not resist. He met Aileen Burley and loved her, as far as a man of his selfish nature could.

There was a collateral element that attracted him. Aileen was an heiress. There was likewise a depressing circumstance—she was a patriot, constant and enthusiastic. She was the head of every woman's national movement locally. When Beaton created a favorable impression through his liberality in subscribing for everything that came along, and learned that Aileen was free to woo, he determined to win her.

Not that Aileen was entirely maiden fancy free. Until a month previous the young lady had cherished a friendship for a young man named Walter Matteson. Village gossips predicted an engagement. Then all of a sudden Matteson disappeared. For a week Aileen was sad and gloomy. A shadow was on her fair face, but she resumed her old cheerfulness and ardor in Red Cross work. To Editha Morris, a particular friend, she made the statement:

"Mr. Matteson and I did not agree on some vital patriotic points."

Sinuous of method, specious of nature, Beaton set himself about the task of winning Aileen. There arrived the moment when he declared his love. Clearly, fearlessly, frankly Aileen intimated that a former proposal had come from a man who had forfeited all her esteem by refusing to volunteer, accepting instead a high-salaried position in a great munition plant.

"I will enlist tomorrow," eagerly declared Beaton. "I would die in a thousand battles for you."

Aileen was impressed with the ardor of this seeming patriot of patriots. Tacitly she accepted his addresses. Why not? There was a lonely feeling at heart, she would win a new soldier for Uncle Sam.

Beaton really enlisted and made great capital of it. His hope was to induce Aileen to marry him before he went away. Circumstances disturbed his clever schemes. He was sent to a training camp. Its rigors repelled him. He was affrighted at stories of the risk and suffering awaiting him abroad. He feigned sickness, obtained a two-weeks' furlough, went to a distant city where he had a close friend, a dissolute young doctor, and between them they put up a scheme in accordance with the plots of Beaton.

Aileen was shocked a week later to learn that Beaton had died while on a furlough. The government simply filed away the certificate of death. In secret Aileen mourned, not so much for a man she had not really loved, as for the shadows of disappointment and unhappiness that seemed to pursue her. One evening she was walking about the garden when two men leaped from a bushy covert, a muffler was thrown over her head and a minute later she was in an automobile dashing away at high speed.

Her captors did not act at all roughly, but one of them warned her not to attempt any outcry. They drove down an obscure country road, stopped at a lonely house and Aileen was ushered into a lighted room. A door opened and a man entered the room. Aileen tottered and paled from the shock of recognition.

"You—Drake Beaton!" she gasped. "The dead alive! Oh! what does this mean?"

The man advanced with an eager, pleading face. In an impassioned address he confessed how his love for her had overcome every other consideration.

"All for you!" he declared ardently. "Oh, Aileen! do you understand that I cannot live without you? I ask you to give up home, friends, to go with me to some distant place where we will be all in all together."

"You dare to say this to me?" cried Aileen, with flashing eyes. "You, a traitor to your country! Oh, you are, indeed, unmasked!"

"You shall go by force, then," hissed Beacon. Just then the sounds of a violent scuffle in the outer room echoed through the house. Three men rushed into sight and one of them was Walter Matteson. His companions seized Beaton.

"How—how came you here?" she faltered.

"I can tell you now what I was bound by an oath not to impart heretofore," explained Matteson. "I have been secretly employed by the government, and was sent to the munitions plant to watch out for spies among its employees of many nationalities because I understand the languages they spoke. More recently I have been assisting the secret service men who were after this fellow, Beaton. My interest in you led me here just in time. Next month I go to France in a military capacity."

"How I have wronged you!" sobbed Aileen. "Can you ever forgive me?"

"There is no need," he said tenderly. "I know only the old true love in my heart for you."

Germany's Supplies.

In the matter of resources for clothing and feeding armies and civilians, the tide is running heavily against Germany. We have yet to see whether the Central Empires—whose expectations regarding Russia's stored-up wheat were so grievously disappointed that Austria had to send train-loads of her own grain and flour to the Ukraine to feed her armies—will fare any better from a Russian harvest of 1918. It is not to be forgotten that Russia herself is in a present state of famine, and that the raising of the old-time "surplus crops" depends not only on the weather, but on conditions in Russian labor and on settlement of the disputed ownership of land. Indeed, one of the numerous grim humors of the Russo-Teutonic peace has been that thus far, instead of the inrush of captured Russian grain to German and Austrian markets, the chief result has been an outcry of anger from the Teutonic landlords, at the treaty pledge to send home the Russian prisoners. It is this virtual slave labor which, with the drain of Teutonic man power to the armies, had been the main dependence for harvesting the German and Austrian crops. The agrarian districts have protested that, without these prisoners, they cannot get in the harvests of 1918, and that interesting state of affairs may possibly explain the recent cable despatches from Petrograd, reporting that Germany, while insisting angrily on the return of all the German prisoners in Russia, was now stipulating that no Russian prisoners should be returned from Germany except those who were ill or incapacitated. Even with the assistance of these prisoners of war, Germany and her allies, who had raised in years before the war as much as 642,000,000 bushels of wheat (which Germany herself had to supplement with imports of 90,000,000 to 100,000,000 bushels) produced only 430,000,000 in 1917.—Scribner.

The Penny Bank In Toronto.

Prof. M. A. Mackenzie, managing director of the Penny Bank in Toronto, has given some very interesting particulars as to the growth and home influence of the system upon the school children. The bank teaches economy to the child, and has a reflex influence in the same direction on the whole household. Although the system takes some time from ordinary lessons and imposes some extra work on the teachers, Prof. Mackenzie is convinced that the lesson thrift it inculcates is alone worth all the time and trouble spent upon it. Every Monday morning during school days the children bring their savings and their pass-books to give to the classroom teacher in their own particular school. Each child presents his passbook with the money to the teacher, waits to see the amount is entered in the pass-book and returns to his place and to his work, carrying with him his pass-book, which shows how much his savings are creeping up week by week. The teacher of each class-room enters the amount received in her cash book and takes the bag containing the money down to the principal's office. Each child who opens an account receives an index card and a pass-book, both bearing the same number. At the end of the month the deposits are taken down to the Penny Bank.

The total amount on deposit has grown as follows: 1906, $81,002; 1907, $99,022; 1908, $100,863; 1909, $112,543; 1910, $142,681; 1911, $175,664; 1912, $216,821; 1913, $266,748; 1914, $270,868; 1915, $266,112; 1916, $307,531; 1917, $395,666. The balance at 31st March, 1918, was $416,490.66. Last winter on a number of occasions the savings account of a child was found useful to draw on for payment of coal and numerous other contingencies which arose. All the money goes to the Post Office in Ottawa. The rate of interest is 3 per cent., the same as allowed in the chartered banks.

History of Gas.

Gas for street lighting was first used in Pall Mall, London, 111 years ago. The first attempt to introduce the use of gas in America was in Baltimore, in 1816. The project was unsuccessful. In 1822 it was introduced in Boston, and in the following year New York streets were lighted by gas. The system did not prove successful, however, until 1827. The use of gas spread rapidly in other cities in the United States and Canada. Rosin and oil were used to produce gas in America in the early days of the industry, but later Newcastle coal and the Albert coal, of Nova Scotia, were employed.

Few Drops on a Corn or Callus
Instantly stops pain and they lift right off with fingers.

This tiny bottle holds the wonder of wonders. It contains an almost magical drug called freezone. It is a compound made from ether.

Apply a few drops of this freezone upon a tender, aching corn or a hardened callus. Instantly the soreness disappears and shortly you will find the corn or callus so shrivelled and loose that you just lift it off with the fingers. It doesn't hurt one particle.

You feel no pain or soreness when applying freezone or afterwards. It doesn't even irritate the skin.

Just ask in any drug-store for a small bottle of freezone. This will cost but a few cents, but will positively rid your poor, suffering feet of every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, or the tough calluses on the bottom of feet.

Women! Keep a tiny bottle on the dresser and never let a corn ache twice.

A Lonesome Donkey.

One summer Mr. Oakes, an eminent lawyer, sent his wife and young daughter to a farmhouse in the White mountains for a vacation. Shortly after he received an urgent request from the little girl to send her a pet donkey to use while there. She had read about donkeys and heard about them, but was not at all familiar with their peculiar vocalism.

The donkey arrived, and the child had many rides around the vicinity. She enjoyed it all hugely, except the animal's strange noises, which inspired her with the profoundest pity for his evident distress.

One day after vainly trying to subdue his vocalism she wrote a letter to her father, in which she said:

"Dear Father—I do wish you would come up here soon, my donkey is so very lonesome."—National Monthly

WHAT IS A CALORIE?

People Have Asked If It Is a New Breakfast Food.

Since food conservation has become a vital factor in carrying on the war against Germany, the layman has encountered in his reading the new word calorie. This word, which formerly appeared only in scientific journals, now jumps at once from the daily papers, from the magazines, agricultural and trade press. In a way, the Food Administration is partly responsible for the increased use of the word, and as a result has received letters from all parts of the country asking: "What is a calorie?" Some people have gone so far as to suggest that it is the name of a new breakfast food, while in one instance the enquirer stated he had heard that it was a new type of explosive discovered by the War Department and wanted to know what the Food Administration had to do with it.

When fuel is thrown on a fire under a boiler heat is produced. This heat is required in order that the engine may perform its work. To do work of any kind requires energy. Food used or burned in the human machine produces energy to maintain the normal heat of the body and to do its work. Work done by the body comprises not only that which requires muscular or mental exertion, but also involuntary exertion, such as the beating of the heart, the expansion of the lungs, etc. The chemical process within the body which transforms our food into energy is similar in nature to the process which takes place when fuel is burned over fire — though, in the body, the burning takes place very slowly and in every tissue, instead of in one central place. The value of food is determined by the amount of energy it yields to the body; and it also has a building and regulating function.

It was necessary that a unit be established for measuring the amount of heat produced when food was completely burned. The unit chosen or universally adopted as the unit for measuring fuel value or energy value for any kind of food is called the calorie. It represents the same principle in measuring as the inch or foot, the units of measuring length; the pint or gallon, the unit of volume, and the ounce or pound, that of weight.

The calorie is the amount of heat required to raise the temperature of one kilogram of water 1 degree Centigrade, or one pound of water approximately 4 degrees Fahrenheit. Our requirements of food, so far as the amount is concerned, can therefore be expressed in the number of calories needed for each person a day. It must not be forgotten that the calories must be derived from the proper kinds of food. — N. Y. Herald.

Heyse as a Prize Winner.

The late Paul Heyse was probably the only man of letters who could boast of having obtained two important literary prizes with an interval of more than half a century between the awards. All the world knows that he got the Nobel prize. All the world does not know that his play, "The Sabines," was allotted a prize in a dramatic competition as long ago as 1857. He was a member of the Round Table of the good King Max of Bavaria, a sovereign whose joy it was to surround himself with men of science and letters.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Hiring and Firing.

The essence of our industrial policy with respect to labor has been continuous turnover. In every industry, though not in every individual establishment, our employers have followed a policy of hiring and firing. If a man did not happen to make good at a particular task, he was discharged and some one else hired, instead of being transferred to some other task better adapted to his qualities. Foremen have considered the power of discharge as their one unfailing method of discipline. Discharge has been in industry what spanking used to be in the home and the schoolhouse. In each case it has been the means by which those too lazy to think of better ways of proceeding have dealt with the weak in their power. The continual change of jobs has prevented the worker from ever learning any job well, and has destroyed all interest in his work.—Atlantic.

One Day at a Time.

Pile three hundred and sixty-five panes of transparent glass one upon the other and try to look through them. Nothing but inky blackness. Take from the pile one pane, look through it, and all is clear. Thus, as we face a new year, with its days piled one upon the other, all is darkness. Each morning, if we take off from the pile of days that one which comes first, we are enabled to see our duties clearly and live out our responsibilities faithfully. We cannot live the second day before the first or more than one day at a time.

AUSTRIANS ARE CRUEL

ITALIAN PRISONERS ARE VICTIMS OF BRUTALITY.

Men Do Not Receive Proper Care and Fall Victim to Different Forms of Disease—Many of Them Die of Tuberculosis — They Are Victims of Torture and Humiliation.

In a story on the return of Italian prisoners of war, Il Giornale d' Italia says:

The thirteenth convoy of returned prisoners of war arrived at Nonza on the morning of the seventh, and one who was not present can have no idea of the miserable state of these unfortunates who, a few months before, had been so full of ardor and enthusiasm. All were reduced to skeletons, pale with the pallor of deep anaemia and upon some were the physical signs of impending death.

There were those among them who tried to smile, but the muscles of their faces seemed unable to respond to their will.

Ragged and filthy, too filthy almost to approach or touch, except they were our brothers, with garments hardly hanging together and shirts, when they had any, slimy with dirt and oil from their bodies, they passed along with feeble and vacillating steps, toward their destination, supported by the arms of their friends, while those among them who were utterly helpless were borne upon stretchers, prostrate and inert as the bodies of the dead.

The cheeks of the spectators were furrowed with tears as they looked upon this cortege of destroyed youth who bore so unmistakably the stigmati of unspeakable suffering.

The following is the dolorous story of their captivity.

Collected after being taken prisoners, in a place from which they were to proceed to the first concentration camp, they were completely denuded upon the pretext of disinfection and furnished with other clothes taken, no one knows from whom, perhaps from the dead bodies of comrades or the enemy.

The sad and humiliated convoy travelled by foot along a road by the sides of which the enemy had laid, with refined and atrocious care, the bodies of our dead.

During the tragedy an Austrian captain of escort insultingly remarked to one of our officers: "In ten days we shall be in Milan." "Excuse me, captain, you are an aviator, perhaps?" was the reply.

Many among those taken prisoner in December were asked if, at the time of capture, they were suffering from any hereditary disease. They replied, as with one voice, that they were not. All united in affirming that the hunger, the cold, the fatigue and bad treatment had reduced them to their present condition; although the great majority were taken prisoners during, or after, the disaster of Caporetto.

How can this unbelievable rapid development of fatal consumption be explained? It is because the soldiers, though full of health and vigor, are so nervously depressed after an unfavorable combat, that the defensive power against pathological germs is abated and the strength of what is called, in medicine, the fagocites, is annulled. Added to this condition are predisposing factors none the less grave. The insults during the long journey on foot, the want of food, or insufficient and bad food, the cold and dampness, the lack of covering at night, the forced labor under the whip of the overseer, the tardy attention when they have fallen ill and the absence of every element of therapeutics, of every protection, of every hygienic measure in the infirmaries.

It is impossible to prevent contagion where there is a confused promiscuity of clinical diseases, in wooden buildings without partitions and impermeable floors, and where the sick have to lie upon beds, rarely washed, and are given for food a broth made of carrots and beets and no meat, eggs or milk.

A layman in sanitary science can readily understand how implacable germs entering bodies without defence operate with frightful rapidity.

At a single camp of Nauthausen, with a capacity of about 60,000 men and where the infirmary has received more than 3,000 sick, the contagion of tuberculosis is widely diffused and makes dreadful havoc.

Camp Nauthausen is one which is shown to visitors as a model of good organization. The mortalities daily quoted, in this camp alone, average forty cases.

Before we try to fix the horrible responsibility upon the innate ferocity of the enemy, for the deficiency and lamentable neglect, we must be just. The internal conditions of Austria are very grave. To them we, in Italy, swim in abundance. The penury of living there is such that only the horse has decent sustenance. Hunger and sickness in consequence makes a tragic situation. The children, the old and the weak fall from life as the leaves in autumn. Our prisoners there have informed us that the people near the concentration camps come to scrape in the dirt for bits of bread, and that for two kili of bread (about five pounds), in one of our forwarded packets, they were offered thirty crowns.

Their bread is adulterated and rationed at a hundred grammes to each person, without anything else, except twice a week a small slice of meat and some greens.

It would seem that Austria must succumb in spite of the peace of Ukraine or Russia, for the will to resist is diminishing little by little. Although their troops are treated better, to conquer, it is necessary to satisfy the internal front. That is not possible very long.

To return to our previous subject —the treatment of our soldiers imprisoned there. It is repugnant for us to think that the medical directors, into whose hands the unfortunate sick are placed, wilfully neglect their humane ministrations or fail to give those remedies which are generally used in certain clinical situations. Yet what are we to understand by the cases of gangrene of the extremities in some of the recently returned men? We treat our domestic animals better when they are sick.

After one has seen these unfortunates returned from Austria without energy, without hope, except to be revenged, without breath, except to tell their sufferings, and with expressions stamped upon their faces, which once seen can never be forgotten, it is easy to realize why they cry out "sooner death upon the field than the long torture and humiliation of the prisoners."

We wish the more frequent restitution to Italy, without the necessity of reciprocity, of our men prisoners of war. This little advance guard of six hundred of the great army of the dying demonstrates the reason for our demand.

The appalling spread of tuberculosis among prisoners in Germany and Austria is widely known. It is a serious problem and one which should have, and probably is having, deep consideration. For the soldier who dies on the field of battle meets death gloriously, but the prisoner must first walk the via Crucis.

HOW ANIMALS SLEEP.

Favorite Position Is an Index of Their Character.

If you are anxious to know your real character—not that which you assume as you strut before men, or even before yourself in your conceited moments—figure out your natural position as you sleep. The index is furnished by John Patterson, who looks after the health and care of the wonderful animal family of Barnum & Bailey's circus.

"Bears, which have no fear, sleep in any position," he said. "The same is true of wolves. Animals of a cunning or cowardly nature, however, are always on the alert, even when asleep.

"The lion, when the excitement of the day is over, stretches itself out on its side, with its paws turned in, and twitches like a big dog. Gorillas and chimpanzees sleep with their hands over their heads.

"A seal sleeps like a human being. It stretches out at full length and enters dreamland on its back, stomach or side. Once in a while a seal will sit up, with its head bent down on its chest, fast asleep in the water, with its ears under, so, as is his custom in his native state, that he may hear the approach of an enemy, sound travelling with great distinctness under water.

"Elephants sleep upright, like a horse, and fitfully. They are keenly alert to the slightest noise and quick to sense things. If they can see the object they do not rattle easily, but if it is something weird sounding and out of sight they need the reassuring voice of their keeper. With the elephant the voice is everything. They have the same feeling for a friendly, sincere voice that a natural musician has for the sound of a musical voice."

In Jerry-Built "Palace."

The Hon. Lady Byng gives a graphic pen picture of the King and Queen of the Belgians in a vivid description of "a flying visit to Flanders," which she contributes to the National Review.

The temporary "palace" at La Panne she describes as "three of the most hideous jerry-built villas it was possible to conceive," and before them stood Queen Elizabeth.

"With her fragility it was hardly credible that she should have weathered the storms of this war as she has done, or survived that retreat from Brussels across her husband's kingdom to this little out-of-the-way seaside resort," says Lady Byng. "Nobody but those who endured it will ever know what that journey must have entailed in suffering and horror, as her motor threaded its way through troops advancing eastwards to try to defend the country and hosts of terrified civilians fleeing westwards from the Germans behind them.

"So close on the Queen's heels were those brutal hordes that more than once, when she and her lady-in-waiting, Comtesse de Caraman Chimay, left their motor at some point whither they were making, a despatch rider would rush up with orders to resume the journey at once. Some day perhaps the world will hear all the details of that grim flight, and not only of that, but of the daily life of the Belgian sovereigns at La Panne.

A Real Grievance.

Down with the slacker! There's a story about a stalwart young volunteer who returned to camp after a trip to town, with a very gloomy air. "What's eatin' ye, Jim?' his crony asked. "You look up against it." Volunteer Jim gnashed his teeth. "So'd you look up against it," he said, "if you'd seen a slacker snugglin' up to your best girl in a box at the movies and fannin' her with his exemption card."

HOW MRS. BOYD AVOIDED AN OPERATION

Canton, Ohio.—"I suffered from a female trouble which caused me much suffering, and the doctors decided that I would have to go through an operation before I could get well.

"My mother, who had been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, advised me to try it before submitting to an operation. It relieved me from my troubles so I can do my house work without any difficulty. I advise any woman who is afflicted with female troubles to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial and it will do as much for them."—Mrs. Mabel Boyd, 1421 5th St., N. E., Canton, Ohio.

Sometimes there are serious conditions where a hospital operation is the only alternative, but on the other hand so many women have been cured by this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, after doctors have said that an operation was necessary—every woman who wants to avoid an operation should give it a fair trial before submitting to such a trying ordeal.

If complications exist, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for advice. The result of many years experience is at your service.

German Peace Is Impossible.

The Russians tried to talk peace with the Germans; they laid aside all old bitterness; they divested themselves of all traditional national aspirations; they offered the hand of friendship, they demobilized their armies; they deprived themselves of every means of defence. And when they had done this the Russians were ruthlessly robbed and despoiled of all that they possessed or could hope to possess. That this was an inevitable consequence of Russia's course a majority of the people of Russia's allies always believed, but only when the experiment was tried could the truth be incontrovertibly established. The Russian revolution laid aside its weapons to prove that Germany was guiltless of previous and prospective crime and that the German people were in control of their Government and prepared to make peace. Disarmed, the Russian revolution was murdered, but in its death and by its death it revealed to us all exactly what the German purpose was and had been from the beginning. In so far the Russian course was a service, expensive as it must prove to all Russia's allies and above all to Russia herself.

Thus, once more Germany has been unmasked and the necessity to abandon peace discussions has been established. We are standing where Europe stood in 1813 before Napoleon had been defeated at Leipsig. We know, as Europe knew then, that all peace is impossible, it can prove but a truce as long as our enemy holds to a policy which means the destruction of the liberties and the denial of the rights of millions and millions of human beings whose rights and whose existence interfere with a German purpose or profit, however inconsiderable.—Frank H. Simonds, in Review of Reviews.

Corrected.

A teacher instructing her class in grammar, wrote two sentences on the blackboard. The sentences were: "The hen has got three legs," and "Who done it?" She said to Tommy, who was not a very bright pupil:

"Go to the blackboard and correct those two sentences."

Tommy slowly approached the board, thinking hard. Then he took the chalk and wrote:

"The hen never done it. Nature done it."

Bad Manners.

"That Mr. Rubinsky you brought home to supper last night had terribly bad manners," remarked the farmer's wife. "What did he do?" "What did he do? Didn't you notice that when he was cooling his tea in his saucer he blew it all over the tablecloth?"

Budding Suffragette.

"My daughter has already written her graduation essay."

"'Beyond the Alps Lies Italy?'"

"I should say not! My girl's a student of contemporary events. The title of her essay is, 'Militancy as Opposed to Lobbying.'"

British Troops Have Gained Additional Ground

No Change in Situation on the French Front

NEXT SUMMER MAY SEE THE RESTORATION OF EASTERN FRONT

Events are Sweeping Russia Back Into the War—Downfall of the Bolsheviski.

AN OFFICIAL CALL

(By Jos. Shaplen, who arrived to-day from Russia.)

(United Press.)

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—Events are sweeping Russia back into the war. There is every reason to hope now that next summer will bring the restoration of the Eastern front. The abrogation of the Brest-Litovsk peace treaty may be expected any moment.

That the end of the Bolsheviki is near has been pointed out repeatedly. I have never been so convinced of it as I am now. The big question was who would succeed them. Germany has felt the inevitable downfall of the Bolsheviki. The late Count Mirbach's principal work in Moscow was to prepare for the downfall of the Bolsheviki and the establishment of a government similar to that of Skoropadsky in the Ukraine. But Russia's passion for freedom and unity has frustrated the schemes of Germany. There will be no Skoropadsky government in Moscow.

COMING BACK.

The Constituent Assembly, composed of an overwhelming majority of Social Revolutionaries and Socialists of the Menshivik group, are coming back into power. Their first act will be an announcement to the world that the shameful Brest-Litovsk treaty no longer exists, that the revolutionary democratic of Russia does not recognize it. An open invitation to the Allied governments to send an army into Russia to help reorganize her military forces for a new fight on Germany will follow.

The Constituent Assembly and the party of the Social Revolutionists have already expressed themselves in no ambiguous terms on the matter. They are now waiting and working unceasingly to get back into power to make their action an official call to the allied governments in the name of the whole people of Russia.

Situation in Russia.

LONDON, Aug. 13.—The Germans intend occupying Petrograd, a despatch to Copenhagen from Helsingfors declares. Troops for this purpose are already being brought forward toward the objective, it is added.

Germany, in the bitterest hour of defeat in the West she has yet known, is menaced in the East, not only by the advance of the Allied expeditions but by a perpetually growing movement of unorganized resistance to her occupation, says the Daily Telegraph in a communication on the situation in Russia. There are parts of Russia where regular troops are stationed, where the commanders have done all that could be done to keep people down by force of arms.

THE WEATHER

During the last few days some very bad hail storms have occurred both south and north of this section, as well as thunderstorms. We have fortunately escaped. Sunday was a very warm and sultry day, the thermometer reaching 91 here. Monday was also warm, but the heat was not so oppressive. The highest was 87 degrees. To-day at noon the thermometer was 99 degrees, but was slowly rising, and the outlook was for several degrees more.—W. P.

Old Battle of the Somme

The Germans are Entrenched in Well Worn Lines—Bringing Up Guns.

(By Lowell Mellett.)

WITH THE FRENCH ARMY IN THE FIELD, Aug. 13.—The old battle of the Somme is on again.

The Germans are entrenched in the well-worn lines, stubbornly holding on and even attempting to counter attack, although somewhat feebly. This situation is the natural result of the necessity for bringing up additional French guns. An artillery berrage began to take the place of the heavy machine gun fire from the Boches. They are also using quantities of mustard gas.

Some idea of the speed of the French advance yesterday can be obtained by the experience of a General, one whose regiment was held up by well placed machine guns. The General's automobile swept past the men, using a depression at the roadside.

"You're going well," he cried. "The Boches can't hold you any more. Come on."

Three hours later the regiment had advanced seven kilometers (four and a half miles.)

Mr. Oliver Here for the Chautauqua

Presided at the Organ of St. Paul's Church on Sunday.

Stanley Oliver, L.L.C.M., organist and choirmaster at the First Methodist Church, St. Thomas, and director of theoretical and choral studies, at Alma College, presided at the organ at St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, last Sunday evening. Being experienced in Chautauqua work, the Dominion Chautauqua Association has sent Mr. Oliver here to make final preparations for our Chautauqua in Peterborough. He will be here until the opening day, Friday, August 16th.

Speaking of Chautauqua, Mr. Oliver says: "All people who have sufficient vision to see the necessity for making the world safe for the coming democracy, must support Chautauqua to be consistent. The churches must support it. Forty years of Chautauqua in the U.S.A. have convinced President Wilson that it is an "integral part of the national defense." Chautauqua is not merely six days of passing amusement. It is a sugar-coated pill whose curative powers cannot be over-estimated. Let those who deplore the present day craze for amusement, which is often questionable, remember that reform can only come through a process of substitution—you cannot steal a man's faith without putting another in its place. Chautauqua fills all the claims that are made on its behalf, and it does it in a way that is a delight to all personal tastes."

Mr. Oliver is at the Empress Hotel, and will gladly answer any inquiries.

(United Press Service.)

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN FRANCE, Aug. 13.—Von Hindenburg to-day is face to face with a poser. Can he maintain himself on his present lines, or will he be forced to beat an undignified retreat along the lines over which the French and British pushed him in 1917, and can he hope ever to assume the offensive again or must he from now on act purely on the defensive. Haig's new blow has greatly added to this depression. The feeling is gradually spreading that Germany has finished her course. But Germany is not finished and undoubtedly will put up a stubborn fight for some time to come. Nobody here even intimates that the war is over. Von Hindenburg, however, is clearly facing the probability of purely defensive warfare.

FIFTH MONTH.

The fifth month of the present fighting season was near its end when Haig struck Thursday. German divisions in reserve on the whole west front were very low. I should calculate there were not over forty divisions (probably 480,000 men. Since Thursday some ten of these have been identified. Yet as a result of Von Hindenburg's half successful blows, two large salients remains to be held. The cost of holding them is huge, as the Allied guns pound ceaselessly day and night, just as they pounded the old Somme lines, which became untenable. In the meantime a comparative lull continues, British positions have been improved along the Somme. Elsewhere there is only local fighting.

Local Fighting.

(By Wm. Philip Simms.)

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN THE FIELD, Aug. 13. — (Noon.) — With local fighting proceeding at many points, the general situation on the British front has changed little during the past 24 hours.

North of the Somme the night was quiet save at Etiah, where British parties captured some enemy defenses and took some prisoners. German casualties have been rather heavy as the result of fighting in the region of Roye, where Canadian troops have moved into more advantageous positions.

Police Found Opium Outfit in Chinese Store Sunday Night

The police added another opium smoking outfit to their collection on Sunday night when they raided a Chinese tea store at 217½ Charlotte street. This morning the proprietor, Yee York, was charged with having opium in his possession, and Hum Toong was arraigned as a frequenter of a resort where opium was smoked. Acting Sergeant Lawrence lead the police detachment which included Constables Dainnard, Wigg, Bromley and Boyd. They seized a "hop" pipe, lamp and a small supply of what is said to be opium. The Chinamen were remanded until Tuesday morning.

REMOVING MATERIAL

Roads About Perronne are Cluttered With Enemy Troops Preparing to Cross the Somme.

LULL IN FIGHTING

(By John De Gandt—United Press).

PARIS, Aug. 13.—The Germans have been hurriedly removing enormous quantities of war material from Peronne during the past 48 hours, and enemy troops are crossing the Somme.

The roads about Peronne are reported to be crowded with German transport, attempting to get this material back to a safer spot.

Huge ammunition dumps at Resson Sur Matz and Orvilliers were abandoned by the enemy in his flight and have been captured intact by the French, it was learned to-day.

Meanwhile, although there is a comparative lull in the fighting between the Oise and the Somme, it is believed the Allies are preparing for some new activity. The military critic of La Presse expresses the opinion that Lassigny has been enveloped by the French, and possibly has already been captured.

Entertainment For the Boys and Girls

A Feature of the Chautauqua.

Our boys and girls grow up (boys into men, especially) and branch out into life having very little information on things that vitally concern us all in after life. And one of these things is the municipal life on the community. How the place is run, financed, governed, directed, organized and of the whole intricate machinery that directs its operation from day to day.

This is not taught in the schools. Men pick up something of it, largely from hearsay. Women put it to one side as something that concerns the sterner sex and as being "man's work." So when a citizen works his way into the civic councils he finds that he has to serve something of an apprenticeship for a year or two before he begins to be useful.

These remarks have to do with a feature of the Chautauqua, that will open in this city on Friday next. One special feature is for the young. For the purposes of the work four or five hundred boys and girls are needed. These, when acquired, will be organized into a veritable municipality. A town council will be elected, clerk, treasurer, police, board of health, charity board, mayor, committees and all the different functions of the town government organized. Those most capable, or seemingly the most capable, will be in line for selection, but it is urged that this will be People's Parliament, and children from all walks of life are urged to get permission to attend.

Most competent people will have the matter under direction. Sessions of council will be held. Committees will be allotted matters on which to investigate and report. The police may arrest offenders who have committed certain fictitious misdemeanors and there may be penalties. And the whole system of municipal activity will be patiently and clearly instilled into the junior minds that will be open to absorb that which may be helpful in after life.

Possibly a coal committee will be formed that will take drastic action. Another will settle off hand the matter of the need for bathing places, and the present city council may find that a whole raft of its lapses will be brought to light.

The above outlines only one of the things reserved for the children. The sessions will be in the mornings. Parents can attend and participate and encourage. The whole to culminate in a grand pageant, "Our Allies," on the last day.

Boys and girls from six to fourteen have as much in store as anyone else in the Chautauqua. Come each morning at nine (except Sunday) and hear the stories, such as the Junior Leader will tell, sing the patriotic songs, get into the games and contests and be in the pageant on the last afternoon.

Tickets for boys and girls, for the whole week, admitting to everything and participating in all, for $1.00. You cannot make a better holiday gift to your boy or girl than the gift of a ticket.

AMERICANS ARE STILL ADVANCING ON VESLE RIVER.

(Special to The Examiner.)
(By Frank Kyler.)

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, Aug. 13.—The Americans continue to smash the Germans north of the Vesle, carrying heavy artillery bombardments with lightning-like thrusts into the enemy lines. There was some infantry fighting on the right wing of the American sector last night, but this morning they were practically unbothered, save for a German feint which failed to develop into an attack.

Congratulations For Canadians

Distinguished Visitors at Canadian Headquarters—Savage Fighting

WITH THE CANADIAN FORCES IN THE FIELD, Aug. 13.—During the past two days the Canadian corps has had the honour to receive several distinguished visitors, who have congratulated it on its splendid work. Among these have been Sir Douglas Haig and Premier Clemenceau.

Sir Douglas rode along the Canadian battle-front, stopping to speak to officers and men at Canadian headquarters. He complimented Sir Arthur Currie, not only on the achievement of the corps, but also on the wonderful spirit animating his men, battle weary after three days of savage fighting, yet whose only desire was to be let loose again on the Boche. The Canadian advanced line has been practically static since Saturday evening.

An Outing for Smith Council

Will be Invited to Try Out the Roads.

The annual meeting of the Kawartha Park Association will be held on Saturday evening. Previous to this meeting the Association is making arrangements to take the Reeve and Councillors of Smith Township for an automobile ride between Burleigh and Young's Point to give them an idea of the roads. "It borders on Kaiserism," said one autoist. "We pay hundreds yearly to the County Council and get nothing for it; the road is a disgrace."

The Royal Black Preceptory, Orange Order No. 261, paraded to Mark Street Methodist Church last Sunday for divine service. Rev. R. A. Whattam, the pastor, preached. His subject was "The Enlightening Christ." In spite of the hot evening, there was a large attendance, and was thoroughly enjoyed.

ALIENS AS SCAPEGOATS.

...The question of the treatment of ...turned soldiers is a much broader ...estion than the position of aliens. ...is not the aliens who stand in the ...y of justice to returned soldiers, ...ough it may be convenient to make ...e scapegoat of the alien. If anything ...wrong governments are to blame, ...d to some extent the whole com...nity is to blame.

...The attitude of the returned soldier ...s easily understood. He was asked ...give up his position, to leave his ...mily and his country, to sacrifice ...mfort and safety in order to secure the safety and liberty of us who remained at home. He answered the call. The result is that the rest of us were allowed to remain in practically the some condition as if there were no war at all. Some have made huge profits out of the war. Even those who are free from that reproach have been living in comfort, following their usual occupations, taking their usual amusement, living their normal lives.

Into such a community the soldier returns, crippled, shell-shocked, gas-poisoned, handicapped in the race of civil life. There is the returned soldier something exasperating in the atmosphere. There is occasionally something cool and patronizing even in the attitude of those who want to be kind and helpful. There is not the heartfelt gratitude that would be expected from people who owe the security of their property, their liberty, and their lives to the men in France.

It is unfair and it is cowardly in the general civilian population to allow all the blame to be borne by a few aliens, who have little to do with the making of our laws and the conditions of employment. Rather, let each of us examine his own conduct, and see whether he is doing his full duty to the returned soldier. Let us examine our laws and see whether they are just to the returned soldier. Let us ask whether returned soldiers are carried back to Canada in comfort and decency. Let us ask whether the pensions are adequate. Let us criticize ourselves and our law-makers rather than the aliens.

Aliens may in some cases be making big wages, but the returned soldier would be little better off if the wages were reduced, or even if all the aliens were deported from the country. What the country needs is wise and just legislaiton—laws that will be just to the whole community, while acknowledging the soldiers' claim to special recognition.

The remedy does not lie in rioting; neither does it lie in the suppression of rioting, necessary though that is. The riots should be regarded as symptoms of discontent with which the Government, Parliament and the community should deal.

We have now on our hands the problem of the returned soldier, which will be immenesely greater and more difficult when soldiers return in hundreds of thousands. The continual nagging of aliens serves only to divert our minds from the real problem, and to postpone the solution. It encourages the rest of us to shirk our own duties.—Toronto Star.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A number of German generals have been retired as a result of the recent defeats. A large number of others have retired themselves a few paces ahead of the British troops.

Ten year sentences are a stiff jolt for the conscientious objectors who have refused to don the uniform of the Canadian army.

It is a new experience for the Canadians and Australians to be fighting alongside of each other.

WHAT OTHER EDITORS SAY

HARD UP.

(London Advertiser)

Every German must give up one suit of clothes to the Government. A similar order in Canada would mean that a good many men would stay in bed.

SPECIAL HONOUR FOR VETERANS.

(Kingston Standard.)

For some reason not stated so far as we know, the proposal that those Canadians who had served in the actual theatre of the war should wear an additional distinguishing mark upon their chevrons, while those who have merely done duty in England should wear a plain chevron, has been turned down by the war office. There are many Canadians in England of course who have got no nearer to actual fighting through no fault of their own, but that should not alter the case that those men who have served at the front should be honoured.

A QUEER EXPLANATION.

(Toronto Globe.)

The Germans' explanation of the retirement of their forces on both sides of the Ancre River—that it was managed "without enemy interference"—reminds one of the American humorist's account of a fight in the course of which a "sidewalk flew up and hit him on the head," and then he dexterously "inserted his thumb in the enemy's mouth."

THE OLD GIRL IS GAME.

Kansas City Star.

We owe England a cheer for this—the old girl is game. She has in the nautical phrase of one of her own favorite sons—and ours—land a point closer to the wind for us than a man could expect of his own married wife. She has stood by at every crisis from the start. Her destroyer fleet took the seas before ours was ready and battled the submarine at a time when it seemed that monster might dispute our passage. She sent us coal last winter when thousands of tons of ships were tied up in our own harbors for want of fuel. Let us not forget it. England's been a good neighbour and a good ally right through the time when most of the flowers we are sending down to the footlight were marked for her co-star, La Belle France. Let's not forget that she never failed to join her voice to ours in acclaiming that wonderful people—and kept right on doing hard, practical, handy jobs for us.

TAKE OVER POTATO CROP.

New British Food Controller Outlines His Views.

LONDON, Aug. 10.—John R. Clynes, in his first speech as Food Controller in the House of Commons on Thursday, dealt mainly with the potato crop. He said the Government would take over the 1918-19 crop from November, and anticipated its ability to stimulate the consumption of potatoes to a greater extent than last year. The American troops in Great Britain and France will be able to receive large quantities of potatoes grown in England.

The Food Controller emphasized the need of continued economy in food, not because there was not sufficient to go around, but because such economy was useful in conserving national energy and resources, especially shipping, and so increasing the number of American troops brought to Europe.

The policy of the Allied Food Controllers, he declared, was to effect complete co-operation to enable Herbert Hoover, the American Food Administrator, to carry out his plan to prevent a further raise in prices and eventually to bring about a reduction in prices. Arrangements had not been completed, but when complete, Mr. Clynes thought it would be found that all competition had been abolished as well as all jealousy and serious rivalry between the Allies. This would also have a tendency to steady prices and increase production.

RIVETER HAS HOTEL SUITE.

WORKER IN SEATTLE YARDS SPENDS VACATION AT THE WALDORF.

New York, August 13. — Dennis J. Horgan, a ship riveter, arrived at the Waldorf-Astoria yesterday from Seattle, Wash., with his wife, and engaged a suite of rooms, where they will spend their vacation. In telling of the work done in the yards where he helped the Skinner and Eddy Company to achieve their record in completing vessels, Mr. Horgan said:

"We have been putting in some good licks at Seattle. The boys are as proud of the shipyard records as the bosses, and the man who would talk strike in our yard out there at the present time would fare a little worse, if anything, than a German spy caught red-handed. The liberal bonuses and over-time pay have flattened the pay envelopes, of course, but the good old spirit is back of it all, and the boys all feel that they are doing their bit to win the war."

Mr. Horgan said that weekly pay envelopes containing more than $100, were a common occurrence among the riveters.

HARDWARE AND METALS.

LINSEED OIL LOWER — STEEL AND IRON PRODUCTS SHOW FURTHER ADVANCES.

Hardware and Metals this week reports: Linseed oil features the market this week in a decline in some quarters of 10c per gallon. A decided drop in the seed market of 35c over figures prevailing last week has brought this about, though the feeling generally is that little lower prices can be looked for. The situation in regard to supplies shows no material improvement and only curtailed demand enables crushers to take care of orders.

A 50c advance in galvanized sheets has been made in some quarters. The question of supplies becomes increasingly difficult, and the jobbers face a period when dwindling stocks are about the best they have to look forward to. Practically all sheets now being sold are going to manufacturers engaged in war work. Jobbers have served a very useful purpose, it is intimated, in looking after this demand, when otherwise a cessation of operations might have resulted from inability to get delivery from the mills.

IRON PRODUTS.

Further advances in manufactured steel and iron products are apparent in quotations named on screw hook and strap hinges, spring butts, floor hinges and shelf brackets. The scarcity of tin plate has influenced prices of bread mixers to higher levels, and new prices on sap spouts for next season are up about 20 per cent.

Jobbers are in some cases qualifying orders accepted for future delivery. These are to be subject to government regulations and restrictions, advances or changes in the tariff or freight rates, and any other conditions arising out of abnormal manufacturing and labour markets which may occur between date or order and date of shipment.

Manufacturers of roofing generally are holding orders to a 30-day basis, and stove prices do not extend beyond August 31. The uncertainty of the future is bringing about these changes in terms of sale, and it is thought little booking business will be handled for next spring as compared with past years.

Munitions Workers

When you go home each day, if your conscience tells you that you have put as much real service into your labour as the individual soldier puts into his fighting, then you will, and everyone else must be satisfied with your output.

The soldier trusts so implicitly in the steady and enduring character of your effort that you cannot be indifferent to the amount and quality of it.

To fall behind in munitions production now---is to dash the Cup of Victory from the lips of those who, for more than four years, have tasted only the bitterness of hope deferred.

The Army must rely upon you.

Food Board Flashes

An amusing little incident reported from Banff, Alberta, shows how two bears proved to be food patriots even while they were breaking one of the commandments.

They were foraging in the larder of the Alpine Club House which of course, was not strictly "within the law"—but then bears will be bears! They helped themselves to four loaves of brown bread but left unmolested the white bread, pies and cakes which were in the larder.

Whether the distinction was a matter of taste or of patriotism it is impossible to say, for the animals are still at large. There are lots of human bears, however, who grab the white bread and other food conservation products, despite the exigency of food conditions in Europe.

"THE EXAMINER" MID-SUMMER

DOLLAR DAY

The day when the Dollar Bill talks louder in Peterborough Stores than any other day in the year. This season it will be held on Wednesday, August 21st. About 45 of the principal stores in the City are participating, and are busy preparing the best list of bargains that can possibly find in their splendid stocks and shoppers will certainly appreciate the extremely varied offerings such a array of stores will assure. As usual the big list of Cash Bonuses is a liberal one, as the Merchants are giving away $175.

This money will be given away in this way:—With every Dollar Purchase on that day, an Estimating Blank will be given to the purchaser. You will fill in your name and address, and a number representing your estimate on the following question:

For your guidance in estimating, we might say that The Examiner is printing and distributing to the Merchants, for use on Dillar Day, 25,000 blanks, and it is only necessary to estimate what number each purchaser thinks will be used on the great day. Should any store run short of blanks, The Examiner will print more, so that the number printed might reach as high as 40,000. The number of estimates put in the last Dollar Day Campaign was in the neighbourhood of 10,000. With this information, an estimate can be made before coming to town. Of course as many estimates can be made as the purchaser has blanks, and they will get one with every Dollar purchase they make.

Make up your mind what and where you want to buy and come to Peterborough on Wednesday, August 21st, expecting the greatest economy shopping event of your lives.

DEEP MYSTERY IS REVEALED AT REQUEST OF CONTROLLER

Letter Fixing Gross Margins Addressed to Peterboro Coal Dealers—Similar Communications Sent to the Different Cities in Ontario —Letter Lacks Explanation.

On Saturday last a letter was received from C. A. Macgrath, Fuel Controller for Canada, the letter being addressed to Alderman Dobbin, as fuel commissioner for the city. It would be assumed that the Department had not made the change in such respect that would have followed on the appointment of Alderman Edgar as commissioner, and the appointment of his successor in office has been so recent that the change may not have been recorded at Ottawa. But as the Fuel Commission members have resigned practically before taking up the duties, the Mayor authorized that the letter, as requested, be communicated to the coal dealers of the city, and also that it be printed for the information of the public. Similar letters have been received in other cities. From the letter the following is taken:

"An investigation of the coal prices prevailing in Peterborough has just been completed by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, and from the result of the investigation . . . under authority vested in me by Order-in-Council of July 27th, 1918, P.C. 1798, I beg to notify you that the gross margin for the city of Peterborough for coal delivered shall be as follows:

"1. Anthracite coal, prepared sizes, larger than pea, $2.50 per net ton of 2,000 lbs.

"2. Bituminous coal, run-of-mine or prepared sizes, $2.40 per net ton of 2,000 lbs.

"By gross margin is meant the difference in the cast of the coal to the dealer, f.o.b. cars at Peterborough and the retail selling price of such coal delivered in lots of one ton or thereabouts, under conditions of delivery which prevail in your city.

"These gross margins include exchange on American funds, and all charges in connection with the handling, storing and delivery of coal and any shortage that may arise.

"These maximum gross margins are to go into effect on the 12th day of August, and I would ask you to kindly notify the dealers in your city by registered letter of such maximum gross margins.

"You will kindly call the dealers' attention to the fact that this action does not in any way relieve them of responsibility for the non-compliance of the coal regulations which may have existed in the past.

"Yours truly,

(Signed) C. A. Macgrath,

Fuel Controller."

It may be explained that the expression "any shortage that may arise" is not to be taken as meaning that any dealer might give short weight in his deliveries, but covers that fact, well known in the trade, that cars of coal arrive at destination and that the bulk weight is found short of the billed weight This occurs in several ways, just how is not pertinent to the matter under explanation, but what is meant is that if a car be billed and passed Customs as of a given weight, and might be found deficient in quantity, that in selling the coal the dealer must sell on the basis of the given weight of the coal and not on the proved weight, which might be short or, as sometimes happens, over

Briefly, the price of the coal, all services told, will be that of the coal on the track at this city and the $2.50 per ton (in the case of hard coal) added to cover all charges of delivery.

THE CITIZENS WHO DID IT

The Men Responsible for Bringing the Chautauqua to Peterboro—What Their Purpose is

Now that arrangements have been completed for the series of Chautauqua meetings to be held in Peterborough, August 16 to 22, it may be worth while calling attention to the men who are responsible for bringing the prominent people to Peterborough who will take part in the Chautauqua.

Before a series of Chautauqua meetings are held in any town or city the central organization sends one of its representatives to the town, who calls on a number of prominent citizens and explains the objects of the Chautauqua. These objects were explained in Saturday's issue. As the directors of the Chautauqua movement desire that the people in each town or city where the meetings are held shall make themselves responsible for its success, they require that a group of local citizens shall undertake to ensure the success of the meetings. In order that this may be accomplished they ask some 24 citizens to pledge themselves for $50.00 each to ensure the expenses of the meetings be covered. Should the meetings prove a financial success these guarantors are relieved of their liability. Otherwise they have to make up the amount of the deficit to the amount pledged. All the local arrangements are left in the hands of committee chosen locally.

As the Chautauqua movement is not a money-making scheme being mainly educational in character, it generally is found possible to enlist the support of many prominent people. After the expenses have been met 25 per cent of the profits are turned over to the local committee for use for patriotic or other worthy purposes.

The Peterborough Chautauqua Committee.

That the Chautauqua to be held in Peterborough is in good hands is shown by the names of the men who are behind it. The officers of the Peterborough Chautauqua Committee are: President, Thos. Barrie; Vice-President, Mrs. Arthur Steveuson; Secretary, John R. Corkery; Treasurer, W. R. Morris; Chairman Advertising Committee, Jos. Wearing; Chairman of Ticket Selling Committee, Webber F. Turner, Vice-Chairman, M. J. Maher; Ground Committee, George H. Roper; Chairman Hospitality Committee, Geo. A. Gillespie, M.P.P.; Vice-Chairmen, F. D. Kerr and Dr. F. P. McNulty; Decorating Committee, R. Ross; Chairman of the Jr. Chautauqua, Mrs. W. R. Morris; Vice-Chairman, Mrs. A. Mowat.

The members of the Advertising Committee to work in conjunction with Mr. Wearing are Walter Stocker, R. M. Glover, H. B. Cowan, J. E. Smith, Stanley Thompson, and James Lynch.

The Chairmen of the other Committees were given power to name the members of their respective committees.

The list of guarantors is as follows: G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P.; W. B. Warne, R. M. Glover, J. R. Corkery, Webber F. Turner, C. S. Thompson, J. R. Middleton, F. J. A. Morris, H. B. Cowan, Jos. I. Duffus, J. A. McKone, J. E. Smith, R. F. Downey, J. E. Sullivan, V. J. McElderry, C. E. Smith, W. R. Morris, F. D. Kerr, Joseph Wearing, F. P. McNulty, M. J. Maher, and Thos. Barrie.

FAIR SUPPLY OF COAL.

Cleveland, Ohio, Aug. 9. — The railroads are delivering a fair supply of coal at the lake front every day, but the fleet could handle a heavier movement, and the boats are more plentiful than cargoes.

HUNDREDS MADE VICTIMS OF BOGUS MASONIC SWINDLE

Members of Alpha Lodge Complain When $50 "Degrees" Fail to Work.

NEW YORK, Aug. 10.—That a band of swindlers, claiming to be Free Masons, conferred fictitious degrees since March on more than one thousand unsuspecting victims, charging each $50, was revealed in the Court of General Sessions when Spencer S. Ramsom and Adam Stepan were arraigned before Judge Malone. Ransom was accused of obtaining money under false pretenses and Stepan with wearing, unauthorized, insignia of a recognized Order. Many soldiers and seamen, it is said, received bogus degrees.

Ransom and Stepan, held for trial and admitted to $1,000 and $500 bail, respectively, recently were indicted, following complaint made by Anton Misiewiczs, owner of a hall at No. 134 Seventh Street, where Ransom, it is alleged, conducted meetings of the "Alpha Lodge," increasing its membership each time. Misiewicz said that he paid Ransom $50 for the privilege of becoming a Mason.

Witold Bruno, of No. 115 Seventh Avenue, told Don Carlos Buell and Joab H. Banton, assistant district attorneys in charge of the investigation, that after he had paid Ransom $50 and became a "Mason" he was assured by Ransom that he would be welcomed by Masons not only in this city but in every corner of the country and in Europe.

Fifty-Five in "Alpha Lodge."

"Ransom told me," Bruno stated, "that for $100 more he would make me a thirty-second degree Mason, and then I would sit as an equal with the kings and emperors of Europe in the head lodges of Masons. I didn't fall, but my father did. He paid Ransom $140 on account. He never received any degrees. When we insisted on my father getting his degrees Ransom returned the money."

Lodges having no connection whatever with Masonry, though represented to be, have been organized throughout the city, according to Mr. Banton, who is prominent in Masonic circles. He stated that he had been informed during his inquiry that fifty-five men composed "Alpha Lodge," alleged to have been organized by Ransom, and which met in the Seventh Street Hall. These victims, Mr. Banton said, have since discarded insignia of the fraudulent Order and will aid in the prosecution of the prisoners.

Soldiers and seamen about to embark for overseas service became "Masons," expecting to be received hospitably abroad by brother "Masons," Mr. Banton said. He thought they would be told that they had been victimized when they attempted to fraternize on the other side.

Operations of the band came to the attention of District Attorney Swann in a twofold manner. Employes in east side shops whose owners are Masons were observed wearing buttons, rinks and other insignia of the Order. When questioned they displayed a lack of fundamental knowledge of things Masonic.

Employers of the men told Mr. Swann of their suspicions. Many of the new "Masons" attempted to attend bona fide lodges, and their ignorance, exposed by the Tylers, subjected them to inquiry by members, and they then related how they had paid Ransom $50 to join the "Alpha Lodge." The investigation then was started.

Found Drunk in a Public Place

Three young men charged with being drunk on Saturday afternoon in a public place, appeared before Magistrate Dumble this morning. One of them was fined $13.75, and the other two will get a hearing to-morrow. According to the police they were sprawled in a stranded jitney in the west end. One of them was on the floor in front with his head cut from striking against the pedal fixtures. This morning his head was wrapped in a voluminous bandage, and inside of it he had vague ideas of how he had become a casualty. It was stated that on Saturday night a doctor had to be called in to pump the excess whiskey from his stomach.

STONEY LAKE REGATTA

Favoured by perfect weather, the annual Stoney Lake regatta held yesterday at Juniper Island, was as big a success as could be expected during such unsettled times.

The affair was splendidly managed by men who are experienced in such events and although the entries were low they came at last and some really good work was done by the young people who were sports enough to enter.

The Committee.

The committee in charge were:

Chairman — Hon. Laurence Grasame, New York.

Official Judges — H. E. Martin, Guelph; Alan Robertson, J. L. Dodsworth, New York; and Dr. F. H. Ingwood, Toronto.

Official Starter—Professor Renwick.

Secretary-Treasurer — W. H. Willoughby.

Presented Prizes.

The prizes for the different events were awarded by Mrs. T. H. G. Denne, wife of he President of the Cottagers' Association, in the evening, just before the dance began. After a few remarks by members of the committee, thermos bottles, paddles and baskets were presented as follows:

Open Sailing Race—1, J. S. Knapman; 2, Mr. Eddis, Toronto.

Canoe Sailing Race — 1, Richard Stubbs; 2, Kyle Haratone.

Boy Scout Race—Cancelled.

Men's Double Canoe—1, B. Blewett and G. Addison; 2, F. L. Cross, Barrie, and Mr. Ford.

Motor Boat Race—1, Mr. Brown, Peterborough; 2, J. L. Dodsworth, New York.

Ladies' Canoe Race— 1 Miss Mary Harstone and Miss Pete Austin; 2, the Misses I. and J. Stubbs.

Men's Single Canoe, Championship of Stoney Lake—1, B Blewett; 2, Richard Stubbs

Outboard Motor Race—1, Craig; 2, Moore.

Crab Race— 1, Richard Stubbs; 2, Carlisle.

Greasy Pole — 1, Thorndyke; 2, Moore.

Hurry Scurry—1, B. Blewett; 2, Donald Fitzgerald.

Tub Race—1, Fletcher; 2, Van Ratta.

Girls' Swimming Race— 1, E. Norshey; 2, Isabel Nelson.

Boys' Swimming Race—1, Moore; 2, Chapman; 3, Sheehy.

Girls Tandem Skiff—1, Jean Elliot and Gertrude Middleton; 2, Pete Austin and Mary Harstone.

The Races.

After 20 years' experience, with Stoney Lake regattas, Mr. L. H. Grahame is a good judge of what is what and he frankly stated that he had never seen a better or cleaner contested race than the open sailing race. For several minutes it was evidently going to be a tie with Mr. Eddis and Mr. Knapman and at the finish they came in neck and neck until Mr. Knapman with a sudden spurt finished with about six feet. The crab race was also a test of good sportsmanship, as rather than carry off the honours with a doubt, Ritchie Stubbs gladly re-ran the course with Graham Addison to clear up some talk of a foul.

Boat Service.

The boat service by the Stoney Lake and Empress was all that could be desired. The Stoney Lake carried her capacity of 350 passengers, the Empress 150. The former stayed until most of the races were run. The Lintonia also brought a big crowd from Bobcaygeon.

The Dance.

In the evening, with splendid music, provided by Mrs. Foster and Mrs. Fenwick, about 200 young people enjoyed a successful dance in the pavilion, which had been gaily decorated for the occasion.

A Roumanian Officer.

A conspicuous figure and one who attracted a great deal of attention was Lieut. Theodorre Gobegela, a guest of Viamede, who recently returned from the fighting as a Roumanian officer with the Russian army. Clad in his military uniform and wearing several medals he makes a striking effect amongst the Stoney Lake cottagers. His story of his flight from Russia, although somewhat hard to understand, is that he was wounded in an aeroplane engagement when a bullet entered his back below his waist and came through his chest. After trying to enter Russian hospitals in Russia, he went to China, and finally wound up in Cobourg, where, with Mr. Kerr, he is pursuing his law course, started at the Bucharest University. He bears the mark of battles fought in 26 bullet holes.

BE READY FOR EMERGENCIES.

The best way is to always keep a bottle of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine in the house, ready for emergencies. Then when croup or colds come suddenly they can be promptly cured before they have time to reach an acute and dangerous stage. To meet this requirement we have put the syrup up in family size bottles which contain nearly three times as much as the 25-cent bottle and sell at 60 cents.

NEOLIN SOLES

Neolin Soles are so comfort-giving at their first fitting. Their flexibility makes uppers feel easier. Their waterproofness is of the permanent, natural kind that no wet can wash away. And they never swell. They preserve the shape and style of the upper, just as they preserve its longer life. They are different from leather, different from rubber, different from every other shoe-sole.

WE PUT THEM ON NEW SHOES OR AS RE-SOLES.

PETERBORO BOY IN FRANCE SPEAKS WELL OF THE Y.M.C.A.

Reply to Correspondent for Information Concerning the Organization.

Miss E. Payne, of Strathcona, Alberta, has received the following letter from a Peterborough boy now in France:

France, June 22nd, 1918.

Dear Edna,— Just a line or two in answer to your very welcome letters and Jack Canucks, which I received O.K. Now I haven't time to write a long letter, but I must say that those poor whelps who run down the Y.M.C.A. ought to be thrown in the river. I wish you could see what they really are doing out here. They are the one and only institution which does anything for the soldiers in this country. If it wasn't for them there would be no cinemas, no sports of any kind. Why we have some great games of ball here I want to tell you. Last night we played a bunch of the 27th a game of indoor baseball, and talk about fun, and I might add that but for the Y.M.C.A. we would not have played. They will lend you anything, a lacrosse outfit, a tennis outfit, baseball or football outfit, uniform and all, so don't you believe one word of what any of those tramps say. I've been out here over two years and surely ought to know. I was to a cinema show the other night; it cost nothing and the pictures were real good. They sell cigarettes at 2 1-2d. or five cents a package. In Canada they are 10c., and Canadian chocolates at 2 1-2d. Everything they sell out here is at a loss and they ask the people in Canada to make good that loss and help them buy the tents and huts which are necessary and also the sports equipment which is of the best. You can always get a cup of tea or coffee when coming out of the line and also a couple of packets of biscuits, and all for nothing, too. Now, you can publish this if you like, as it makes one feel hostile to have some of those poor yaps who need to be fed with a spoon, hollering their no good heads off about the one and only institution that caters to the lads at the front line, and now I'll close, with many thanks for the papers, and hoping to hear from you again soon. I remain,

Your sincere friend,
Percy Cunningham.

Address on Sin By H. D. Kennedy

At the Sunday Evening Service in Central Park—Attendance Large.

Central park meetings on Sunday evening are proving intensely interesting. Sunday evening Mr. H. D. Kennedy spoke on, "Be Sure Your Sin Will Find You Out," numbers 32:23.

The following are excerpts from his address:

Your sin is not done with you when you are done with it.

It will sooner or later compel the door to know that the evil done is evil to the one that did it.

Sin is a detective, is not a man arresting his sin but sin arresting the man.

You cannot run away from sin any more than you can from your shadow.

You may flee from the past but you cannot alter it.

Your past always stands as you have made it, you cannot separate any one act of your life, from your life, any more than you can throw a pebble out of the reach of the law of gravitation.

No sin is worth the price you pay for it.

Repentance is never easy and each day it becomes harder.

Remorse means to bite backward to gnaw oneself, a quarreling going on inside of a man.

Conscience proves a moral governor in the universe.

Death is a policeman come to bring the soul to judgment.

Earth's mistakes cannot be rectified in eternity.

Every thought, word and act is written down in the indellible ink of eternity.

Memory is eternal; some would gladly sell it or give it away.

Your sin will pursue you until you come out of your hiding place and accept mercy.

If you won't do that it will bring you to judgment.

No grave is deep enough to bury a great sin.

Nowhere in the Bible do we find an excuse for sin.

According to Jesus no loss that could come to the body is to be compared to the loss of the soul when we sin against God.

Find your sin out and confess it before it finds you out.

If you do God will blot it out of the Book of His Remembrance.

Unbelief in Christ is the root of all sin.

No man in his natural state can love God and hate sin.

God looks at the principle of sin not the amount.

A mans greatest burden is a guilty conscience and one look at the cross and its gone.

Whatever be the death that is the penalty for sin, that death Christ died.

Death did not choose Him. He chose death.

Nothing gives God more delight than to pardon the ungodly when he takes the sinners place before Him.

There is nothing man fears so much as death, add to that the word eternal.

Christs' death did not make God love men, it was the outcome of God's love.

All sin, upon repentance is made as though it had not been.

Christ's star of destiny was His death on Calvary.

shown on the cross; the extent of sins shown on the cross the extent of sins sinfulness was that it sent Him there.

The atonement does not effect you until you accept Christ.

Dr. Fisher of Toronto, closed the meeting.

MR. J. H. BURNHAM THREATENS TO CALL A PUBLIC MEETING

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—A Minister of the Crown has thrown out a suggestion for the consideration of the Canadian people. He suggests that Chinese or other foreign cheap labour should be brought into Canada by the Government. This question will be a very live one in a short time if we are to take this hint which is only one of many. It means that home labour shall be unprotected. There are some who go farther and would not require foreign cheap labour to leave its home at all, but would allow it to stay there and make its cheaper products and ship them to Canada. To my mind this is a worse suggestion than that of bringing the cheap labour here. Is I shall be called upon as your representative to express my opinion by voice and vote at the next session which may be an early one, or indeed before that, since the cabinet has power under the War Measures Act to bring in cheap labour without further consulting Parliament, I am anxious to consult the farmer and the artisan on the point, and for the Government to have their opinion. Cheap Siberian wheat will be knocking at our door the day after the declaration of peace. The freetrader will laugh with scorn and exclaim—"What, will you shut out cheap food and starve the poor?" The answer is that if we are to have foreign cheap labour and foreign cheap wheat, cloth, leather-goods, steel, etc., let us face the issue at once. The Minister's suggestion is the key that unlocks the door and lets it all in. If it is good in war time, it ought to be good at any time. Cheap foreign wheat will lower the price of our farms, and cheap foreign labour would lower the rate of wages, and cheap foreign goods must certainly do so. What then do we want? Do we want all this, or do we wish to remain as we are? The freetrader exclaims that the vice of protection is that combinesters take advantage of it—but it is easy to thwart tricksters. Do we want cheap manufactured goods, cheap agricultural products, etc. and etc. If so then we must admit the competition of the oriental coolies of whom there are some 500 millions in person and by their products, or do we think on the other hand that we have a right in Canada to run our own show—that Protection is protection of labour and established industries such as farming, or it has failed of its purpose? Then let us say so and say it before it is too late. You can't have goods as cheap as the Oriental can make them unless you are willing to take oriental wages, and capital and machinery will go where there is cheap labour if it is open for them to do so. But you can't pay for cheap things no matter how cheap they are if you have no work. Some day some sensible man or woman will arise and show how all classes of labour and all classes of goods should be paid for at certain prices so that there will be an exact balance of remuneration and fair play all round. But so long as it can be said by a ruling power that the slums and purlieus of the East shall enable some of us to produce at the expense of Canadian labour we are still hovering on the brink of the ruin of Canadian labour and of Canadian farms. With this object in view I propose to ask the public to attend a meeting in the Central Park at an early date for farmers, artisans and the public generally so they may instruct me what they wish me to do at this moment of industrial crisis. De you want cheap foreign labour or home labour? Do you want cheap foreign food and cheap foreign goods are home-made ones

OTTAWA, August 10.—The number of Canadians who have joined the Royal Air Force, and its predecessors, the Royal Naval Air Service and the Royal Flying Corps, since the outbreak of the war is not available for publication owing to military reasons. The same secrecy, however, is not applied to the other activities in Canada in connection with the development and maintenance of the allies' air service.

In January of last year the Imperial Munitions Board, through Canadian Airplants, Limited, commenced the construction of airplanes for training purposes in Canada at the national factory, where the output of flying machines has now grown to a substantial total. The present capacity of the plant is 300 machines per month, which with the spares turned out, is equivalent to 350 machines monthly.

The total number of machines manufactured to the end of last May, together with the spares, was two thousand.

The number of employees engaged at this factory is 2,150, and recently the plant has been engaged in constructing a number of bombing planes for the United States navy, showing how closely the two allied countries of North America are co-operating in their effort to beat the Hun.

CANNOT PRESERVE FRUIT FOR LACK OF GRANULATED SUGAR

SARNIA REPORTS ONLY YELLOW VARIETY OBTAINABLE.

Sarnia, August 13. —" The scarcity of sugar in this city is becoming serious. To-day several prominent city grocers stated they had no granulated sugar on hand, but that they had plenty of yellow sugar. Those dealers who have granulated sugar are limiting their customers to a maximum of 60 cents worth at a time.

As a consequence the preserving of fruit has fallen off to a great extent. The householders while willing to pay the high price for granulated sugar with which to preserve fruit cannot obtain it in sufficient quantities to supply their tables, let alone to use it for preserving.

The local soda water works is experiencing considerable difficulty in getting out enough of the favourite soft drinks owing to the lack of sugar and during the past few days has been unable to supply its customers with several of the most popular brands of soft drinks. Up to date the sugar scarcity has not seemingly affected the ice cream supply, there being plenty to go round.

A Crowd of Four Thousand Took in the Attractions at the Exhibition Grounds

Ideal Weather Contributed to the Success of the Occasion—Good Horse Races.

OTHER EVENTS

Four thousand persons passed through the turnstiles at the Exhibition Grounds yesterday, where some of the best sporting events of the season were staged for the benefit of those who were fortunate enough to be present. Ideal weather favoured the Exhibition Board, under whose direction the attractions were staged. The different events were run off without a hitch, with the exception of one of the horse races, in which one of the drivers fell off the sulky, leaving the horse to finish the heat alone. The driver was able to complete the card in spite of the few bruises he sustained.

Took Three Minutes.

One of the premier events of the afternoon was the performance put on by "Raffles," to whom was delegated the task of freeing himself from a straight jacket while hanging by his feet in mid-air. The jacket was made by the J. J. Turner Company, and so confident was Mr. Reginald Turner of his ability to construct a jacket that would hold "Raffles" that he bet an extra ten dollars just before "Raffles" was pulled up, that the jacket would hold. Mr. Turner lost his ten dollars in about three minutes after "Raffles" got to work. It was a good exhibition, and worth the price of admission.

Motor Cycle Races.

The motor cycle races, while not up to the standard, attracted a good deal of interest. One of the riders was unable to get his machine tuned up, and while he made an attempt to drive the machine in the race, which was a five-mile event, he never got away from his opponent, who lapped him twice in the five miles. The winner opened up on the grand stand stretch and gave a fairly good exhibition.

The Horse Races.

The big feature of the afternoon was the horse races, which were close and exciting enough to keep the spectators up on their toes during the progress of the various heats. The horses were well handled, and gave a good account of themselves. It was an ideal day for racing, and the track was in splendid shape.

Motor Cycle Races.

Two motor cycles entered in the motor cycle race. The winner was an Excelsior driven by Jack Gillespie, with Jack McDonald as a passenger. It made the 5 miles in 8 minutes and 11 seconds. The second cycle was an Indian, driven by Dick Foster. His engine was working very poorly, and the Excelsior gained a lap on him in the fifth round and again in the tenth.

Between the Heats.

Between the heats the Twirling Talbots performed in front of the grand stand. Their hang-on tenacity at once delighted and amused the crowded grand stand. Hanging on by their teeth to a leather strap they could twirl in either direction, it seemed, any length of time. At the conclusion of both performances they were heartily cheered.

In the main building the Peter Robinson Chapter I.O.D.E. gave a living picture exhibit under the direction of Mrs. A. Perrin. The exhibit was well patronized and was a feature of the programme.

ANNUAL PICNIC OF ST. ALBAN'S SUNDAY SCHOOL

Was Held at the Residence of Rev. Mr. Spence—Plans of New Church.

The Annual Picnic of St. Alban's Sunday School was held yesterday as in previous years at the residence of Rev. C. A. G. Spence, Auburn and proved a very joyous occasion both for the sixty juveniles who attended and their parents. This day is always anticipated with pleasure by the members of St. Alban's and it would have to be a serious contingency that would debar them from participating in the event. Three young boys, former members, drove in from their new home ten miles away and were given a hearty welcome by their small friends. Bathing, boating and games were freely indulged in and during the afternoon a long list of races was run off, the prizes being handed to the winners by Mr. Fred Andrews.

The following were the fortunate recipients, first prizes:—Jean Chapman, Albert Evans ,Phyllis Simmons Kenneth Andrews, Hilda Evans, Winnie Christmas, Gordon Connors, Winnie Evans, Dick Evans, Hazel Patterson, Frank Connors, Doc Connors, Violet Underwood.

Second Prize:—Bernice Andrews, Wesley Whiteside, Pearl Birfield, Melville Chapman, Margaret Patterson, Edith Wallwork, Douglas Simmons, Winnie Evans, Claude Andrews, Muriel Heaslip, Grace Crawley, Phyllis Spence

Men's race, 1st— Mr. Spence, 2nd Mr. Andrews.

Ladies Race, 1st—Miss M. Spence, 2nd—Mrs. Andrews.

Swimming Race.—1st Fred Andrews, 2nd Dick Evans.

The plans of the proposed new church were on exhibition and received favourable criticism, although it was realized a heavy task lay before the congregation to assure the building of the handsome edifice. The plans were prepared by Mr. W. A. Langton, Toronto, who has planned several of the more important Anglican churches in that city.

For Men of Modern Industry —Neōlin Soles

The big Mogul locomotive has supplanted earlier engines in modern transportation. Giant turbines now hum where the old water-wheel creaked. To-day demands better work, higher standards; greater efficiency.

Modern men in the busy world—the men under whose hands our manufactures are produced and distributed—are more efficient men. And these workingmen must have more efficient aids in their daily work.

The old form of shoe-sole is inefficient. It is stiff. It wears out quickly. It lets water soak through. But the modern sole is Neōlin—as far ahead of former soles as the electric motor is ahead of hand power.

Science studied the things a shoe-sole should do—and produced Neōlin.

Neōlin Soles wear longer thus cutting shoe-costs. Millions have discovered this on their Sunday shoes. Now Neōlin in thicker sizes is increasing the wear of everyday shoes. And on children's shoes you can now get soles as good as those on men's, for all Neōlin Soles are of the same quality.

Neōlin Soles are flexible—they ease the feet. Those who stand or walk all day find new shoes with Neōlin Soles as comfortable as old shoes.

And Neolin Soles are waterproof. Rainy days—damp floors—you can go dry-foot anywhere.

For their economy—for their comfort and health-protecting waterproofness—get shoes with Neōlin Soles.

Most merchants now have work-shoes with Neōlin Soles. More dressy shoes for Sundays. School shoes for children, too.

Then take your present shoes to the repairman and let him put on half soles or full soles of Neōlin.

As a safeguard—be sure you see the name Neōlin underneath the sole.

Neōlin-soled shoes are in most shoe stores. But you will find them more quickly by looking for this price-ticket in shoe-store windows.

Biggest Season in Twenty Years — Large Increase Over Last Year.

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C., Aug. 10—Fishermen and cannerymen agree that the indications are that the biggest salmon season in twenty years is before them.

The sockeye and humpback already have appeared in the Skeena, and some canneries have put up more than their entire pack last season.

Many fishermen are cleaning up from $40 to $50 a day. In Naden Harbour one seine took in a thousand salmon at one haul. In one night a six-man crew landed 3,000 fish.

LEAGUE LEADERS BEAT MATTHEWS-BLACKWELL IN EXTRA INNINGS GAME

Score Was Tied in the Eighth Innings—Matthews Team Is Now In the Cellar.

SUMMARY OF THE GAME

Riversides were all at sea in the early stages of Saturday's City Twilight League game with Matthews-Blackwell. At the end of the fourth the Pork Packers were ahead 6 to 4, but the League leaders settled down, and blanked their rivals for the balance of the game, although it took them ten innings to grab off the decision. They tied the score in the eighth and fell on Close with a vengeance in the extra session, scoring four runs. As a result of the defeat the Matthews' team drop into the cellar.

Kirn's timely hitting was a big feature of the engagement. The Riversides' pitcher drove in five runs and scored another himself.

The game although loose in the early stages, was one of the most exciting of the season.

Cunningham flied to McCarney. Pilling fanned. Two runs, one hit, two errors.

Kirn single dover third, scoring Connors and Field and going to second on the throw to the plate. Lebarr flied to Shaughnessy. Sheehy drove liner to close and Kirn was doubled at Second. Three runs, two hits, no errors.

Matthews—Close was safe, when Guerin dropped Kirn's throw. Lefave singled to left. Legros crashed one to Sheehy who tagged close on the line, and doubled Lefave at second. Shaughnessy fanned. No runs, one hit, one error.

THIRD INNINGS.

Riversides—McCarney died on a foul fly to Lefave. Guerin was safe on Cunningham's miss and Connors running for him stole second, going to third on a wild pitch. Phelan was safe on a bunt but was caught going to second. Smyth hit close who got Connors at the plate. No runs, one hit, one error.

Matthews—Coursey singled past McCarney; Lowe singled to centre; Cunningham bunted to Kirn and Coursey was out at third. Pilling fanned. Rahmel lifted a fly to Lebarr who missed the ball, Lowe scoring. Cunningham was picked off third, Phelan to Smyth. One run, two hits, one error.

Matthews—Close fanned; Smyth lost Lefave's roller. Legros singled to right centre, sending Lefave to third. Shaughnessy doubled to left, scoring Lefave and Legros; Coursey singled to left and Shaughnessy was out at the plate when he failed to touch the rubber. Smyth dropped Lowe's fly and Coursey scored; Sheehy throwing high to the plate. Cunningham hoisted to Guerin. Three runs, three hits, two errors.

Peterboro Boy With American Engineers

Private La Verne Brown Enlisted After Being Rejected Three Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—Pte. La Verne Browne, son of A. Browne, advertising manager of the Western British-American and Canadian-American, who was home on a 10-days' furlough, has returned to Washington, D. C., where he is stationed with Co. 2, U. S. Engineering Corps. Pte. Browne was in the accounting department of the Northwestern Railroad for years. He made three ineffectual attempts to enlist before he was finally accepted. Slight physical disability, which stood in his way was at last overcome and he was given a chance to do his bit. His parents hail from Peterborough, Ont.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT NEAR DUNSFORD

A serious accident occurred near Dunsford, on Friday when Mrs. David Lewis and her daughter, Miss Gladys were seriously injured. It appears that they were driving to Dunsford to catch the train (Miss Lewis intending going to Peterborough on a visit) when a motorcycle approached them on the road. The horse took fright, throwing the occupants out. Both Mrs. Lewis and Miss Lewis sustained broken legs, and the buggy was completely wrecked.

Dr. White, of Lindsay, attended the injured ones.

Two Exhibition Games Were Played in Peterboro Yesterday

Peterboro Ball Tossers Won One and Lost One—Return Match With Lindsay.

Two exhibition games of baseball were played at Riverside Park yesterday. In the morning the I.O.O.F. baseball team, of Lindsay, played the return match with Matthews, of Peterborough, defeating Matthews by the score of 11 to 6. The Oddfellows had Jack Spratt on the mound and Bill Cinanmon behind the bat, with Garnett on second base. Peterborough walked out two different pitchers, otherwise their line-up was the same as they played here last Monday. Lindsay went to bat and retired in order. Peterborough came up and registered four runs right away but they were held scoreless until near the end, when they obtained two more. The Oddfellows scored in every innings from that on.—Lindsay.

Defeated Cobourg.

The Riversides whitewashed Cobourg in the afternoon. Kirns, for the former, played an excellent game, and after the fourth innings the game was scoreless for both sides. The score was 5-0 for the Riversides.

BASEBALL.

The De Laval and Thistles meet to-night in a League fixture. This promises to be a good game, and should attract a large crowd of fans. The game starts at 6.45 sharp.

Dempsey Fights Like Stan Ketchel

Feinted Fulton's Guard Down, Then Shifted With Right.

Jack Dempsey cannot claim the heavyweight championship of the world—so much the worse—because Jess Willard, virtually retired, refuses to announce his retirement and is still to all intents and purposes champion.

But a title is an empty thing unless its owner does something to make it worth something, and the fact that Jack Dempsey is the greatest heavyweight of the present time somewhat offsets the fact that the title is held by Willard.

Perhaps the greatest surprise ever dealt the boxing public was the 23-second knockout of Fred Fulton by Jack Dempsey.

Dempsey had lots of friends, but the majority of the talent was lined up with the Minnesota plasterer, but even the most ardent Dempsey supporter did not believe Dempsey could man handle Ferocious Fred in less than a round, particularly when it is considered that 8-ounce gloves were used in the bout.

To the old timer Dempsey is a mixture of Bob Fitzsimmons and Stanley Ketchell.

A ringside account of the Dempsey-Fulton fight the other night seems strangely familiar to those who watched the big fellows of other days.

For instance:

"Dempsey came in wide open and feinted with his left to the body. This as Fulton dropped his arms to ward off the punch Dempsey made a lightning shift and drove a terrific right hand to the ribs:"

This from a San Francisco paper later in 1909:

"Ketchel rushed at Johnson, wide open. He feinted for the negro's stomach and when Johnson dropped his guard Ketchel shifted his right to the jaw, Johnson going to the floor for the count of nine."

There has been a little post bellum talk of Fulton quitting.

One thing is certain. If Fulton laid down after he had been knocked to the floor it was because he knew that he could not weather through the two and a half minutes of the round. Fulton has never been noted for courage, but being recognized as the leading heavyweight champion aspirant in the world, would not have "laid down" unless he knew he was hopelessly beaten.

STORM AT PORT HOPE.

Factory Roofs Blown Off and Much Damage Done.

PORT HOPE, Aug. 13.—Port Hope was visited by two severe electrical storms Sunday afternoon, the second being exceptionally heavy, with torrents of rain and hail. The Port Hope Sanitary Factory, at the lakefront, suffered several thousand dollars damage. The roof of the drafting room and the roof of the new foundry were blown off, the latter alighting on the store-room roof and smashing it in. The sprinkling system in each department was broken, and much damage was done by flooding. Part of the roof of the Brandon shell factory was blown off, and nearly all the windows in the west side smashed.

FRENCH LAUNCH ATTACK

but a German counter attack regained them.

Gained Control.

LONDON, Aug. 13. — The French have gained control of the entire Massin-Lassigny Ridge on the southern end of the Picardy battle front, according to a despatch this afternoon. This gives command of the town of Lassigny and Valley of Divette, as well as the entire district to the north.

Only at one corner of Massin did the Germans appear for the moment to be in possession. This corner is one of the highest lumps on the hills, resting a few feet above the positions now in possession of the French. The French are attacking this hump strongly and there seems every prospect in their favour. When the French guns have gained the top here, the enemy's communications will come under observed fire.

Divisions Identified.

So far thirty-three German divisions have been identified in the fighting. The enemy's movements are gradually being revealed and he is drawing troops out of the line to the east end of his flanks to cover any gaps. This is an operation, however, which can only be carried out to a limited degree.

Canadian Press:

LONDON, Aug. 13. — Soissons-Rheims Front.—Heavy local fighting is reported in progress at Fismelte, on the north bank of the Vesle, where the Franco-American forces are holding the line. The Allies here were attacked by the enemy and forced to retire to the south bank of the river. An immediate counter attack was launched and, according to latest reports, old positions of the Allies on the north bank of the river have been recovered.

Canadian Press:

PARIS, Aug. 13.—General Von Mudra and General Libreicht, who commanded the German armies in the offensive which began on July 15, have cording to Berne newspapers which been placed on the retired list, advices have been received here. General Von Mudra was one of the German commanders during the Verdun salient. In 1917 he was decorated by Emperor William for his services there.

A STORY OF CRUCIFIXION.

Corpl. James Irving Parker of Chicago, who recently returned from the Western front, where he drove an ammunition truck for the French army, but who now is an enlisted man in the U. S. Signal Corps, relates a story of German atrocities culminating in the crucifixion of fifteen Canadian soldiers.

"We were moving forward in the Chemin des Dames drive last October on the heels of the fleeing Huns," says Corpl. Parker. "A crowd of truck drivers was billeted for a few hours' sleep in one of the French chateaus which the Huns, in their flight, had failed to destroy.

"We were congratulating ourselves on the excellence of our quarters when a Poilu appeared and said in broken English, 'Americans, come with me.' We followed him up a broad, winding staircase and entered a room that must have been thirty feet square. On the falls of that room hung fifteen crucified Canadian soldiers. Five hung on each of three of the walls.

"Four spikes to a man were used in the crucifixion, one through each wrist and one through each ankle. The victims were thirteen privates and two officers, all in full uniform. There were no wounds on the bodies of the men other than those made by the spikes."

A Canadian regiment had been placed at this point of the Chemin des Dames sector about two weeks before to relieve the war-worn Poilus, Corpl. Parker explained, and a few days before the drive thirty of them had mysteriously disappeared.

Parker, who is home on two months' leave after being gassed, is the son of James J. Parker, a real estate broker at 69 West Washington Street, Chicago.

FIRST TRAIN FERRY TO CROSS ENGLISH CHANNEL

For the first time in the history of railroading a train ferry has crossed the Eng. Channel from Newhaven, England, to Dieppe, France, carrying about 50 cars. Since early in the war thousands of British railway cars have been employed in France in transporting troops and supplies, but they have all been transferred to the continent by freighters. The inauguration of ferry service indicates that the difficulties created by very pronounced tides have been overcome at last to the mutual advantage of these two allies. At Dieppe the water level varies as much as 31 feet. To overcome this, short bridges, attached at one end to the dock and resting on large floats, are employed. During loading and unloading the ferry is chained to the float and dock pier as well. The two smokestacks are located one at either side of the craft, leaving space for tracks down the center of the deck.

POLICE ARE LOOKING FOR TAXI DRIVER.

Who Is Claimed to Have Driven Major Sharp to Railway Station.

KINGSTON, Aug. 13.—That on Friday last Major Sharp, the missing Kingston officer, was driven from the Armouries to the outer station by a local taxi driver is the latest clue that special officers working on the case have secured, and they are working on it.
Who was the taxi driver? This is the question the officers want to solve, and they are confident of doing so, and believe that when this taxi driver is located he will be able to give some valuable information. The detectives are confident that Major Sharp is alive and put no faith whatever in the suicide theory.
That the taxi driver who took the major from the Armouries should volunteer this evidence in order to help clear up the mystery is the general opinion.

WEDDING BELLS

O'BRIEN—MILBORROW.
A quiet but pretty wedding took place yesterday morning at seven o'clock at St. Mary's Cathedral, Kingston, when Elizabeth Phoebe, only daughter of Sgt. and Mrs. Geo. Milborrow, was united in the holy ther Kearnay, to Thomas Joseph ther Kearnay, to Thomas Joseph O'Brien, son of Mr. and Mrs. James O'Brien of Peterborough. The bride, who was unattended, was given away by her father, and looked very neat in a suit of navy blue with hat to match. After the ceremony the happy couple motored to the home of the bride's parents, where a dainty dinner was served, after which they left on the 1.30 train for Peterborough, where they will reside.

After a honeymoon in the Adirondacks, Mr. and Mrs. Heffernan will make their home in New York.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.
Mr. Heffernan is the son of Mrs. P. Heffernan, 377 Reid street, who with his sister, Miss Margaret Heffernan, and Mr. and Mrs. John Carroll, were present at the nuptials.

Machine Wrecked at Port Hope When Engine Failed.

PORT HOPE, Aug. 13.—Capt. W. Eastwood and Lieut. Allan Sullivan, of the Leaside, Toronto, camp of the R.A.F., visited town Sunday in their machine, No. C215, and made a landing on the Trinity College School grounds. About two o'clock they left, intending to go to Cobourg, but in rising the engine failed to operate properly, and they struck the trees at the Town Park and the machine crashed to the ground. Lieut. Cocoanut Oil Fine For Washing Hair

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Don't use prepared shampoos or anything else, that contains too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Just plain mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and entirely greaseless), is much better than anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily, and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at most any drug store. It is very cheap, and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months.

British Navy Not on Parade

Keep in mind the coming campaign in the interests of the Navy League of Canada and Great Britain. Those who do not really realize what the British Navy and the Great Merchantile Navy is doing and has done, should read Kipling's "Fringes of the Fleet." There you have it.

The British Navy is not on parade. It is not on the squares for show, not on the streets, it is out of sight of the public, on the seas away from home. It makes no noise. It is a silent service.

The Navy League of Canada has been formed to support in all ways the two fleets, the fighting and the trade fleets. As guardians of liberty and commerce, for leave for all to come and go on the great seas and to hold access to all sources of our commercial prosperity.

Keep in mind the campaign. Early in September.

SIBERIAN PLAN FIRST FRUIT OF IMPERIAL WAR CABINET

Step Suggested by New Imperial Body, Approved by Canadian Privy Council, Gives Canada for First Time Task of Representing the Empire by Herself.

Ottawa, Aug. 14. — The Canadian Cabinet made its most vital decision since the outbreak of war when it agreed to the recommendation of the Imperial War Cabinet to forward an expedition to Siberia to fight beside the Allies in an effort to liberate Russia from the German yoke. This is the first time that Canadian soldiers have gone to the Orient; it is the first time that Canada has been the sole representative of the Empire—because troops from the British Isles are not expected to participate in the expedition. It recognizes Canada's peculiar interest in the Pacific and increases throughout the world Canadan standing and prestige.

The autonomous growth of the Empire since the outbreak of war is emphasized by this decision. When the war commenced in 1914 Canada had no "say" in the declaration of hostilities. Sir Robert Borden as well as British statesmen, have stated emphatically that such a state of affairs could not continue. If the oversea Dominions were to participate in the Empire's wars, they must have a share in the Empire's foreign relations and in the making of war and peace. To carry out this principle the Imperial War Cabinet was formed. This decision in regard to Russian policy made by the representatives of all the self-governing Dominions is an important outcome of the new policy. The Imperial War Cabinet could not bind Canada to the decision; the matter was first referred to the Canadian Privy Council for approval. This has been given. This action of such vital importance to Canada and the Empire, could not have been easily taken without infringing upon Canadian autonomy if the Imperial War Cabinet had not been formed.

MR. HENRY MULLIGAN CELEBRATES HIS EIGHTY-SIXTH ANNIVERSARY

Millbrook Resident Recalls Some of the Experiences of his Early Days.

MILLBROOK, Aug. 14.— On Monday of this week Mr. Henry Mulligan, of Millbrook, celebrated his 86th birthday. A number of his friends gathered at his home, and a good time was enjoyed by all. Mr. Mulligan, who is feeling well, considering his well-advanced years, was the recipient of many appropriate presents.

Mrs. Mulligan, assisted by Mrs. S. W. Mulligan, served a dainty luncheon. During the course of the meal, Mr. Mulligan gave reminiscences of the early history of the 'Cavan Blazers' and 'Marvernes' which were delightfully interesting.

The health of the host and hostess was proposed and ably responded to, as were the toasts to 'The King,' 'The Empire,' and 'Our Boys in Khaki.' At an early hour the guests left for their homes, after wishing Mr. Mulligan many more happy anniversaries. He received many 'good wishes' by wire from friends at a distance who could not be present.

The following brief history of Mr. Mulligan is interesting:

Born Aug. 12, 1832, on the 7th con. of Cavan, on the farm at present owned by Mr. Harry Seaton; attended school at an old log school house, where Whitfield's school house now stands. There is a large boulder in a field south-east of the school. On this stone he always sat to eat his lunches. Boys, in those days, were as full of deviltry as they are now, as he tells of getting a sound trouncing for throwing a nail and hitting his old teacher behind the ear.

There was only one store in Millbrook in those early days, the foundation of which still stands opposite Mr. Thos. Lang's residence, Tupper street. Tom Sowden kept the store and he was a hospitable man; he kept a tin pail full of whiskey always at the door and a cup beside it; anyone was welcome to a drink. Mr. Mulligan relates of going to the store with his mother when he was six years old; being thirsty he took a drink from the pail and nearly choked to death, but he thinks a little drop of whiskey would not bother him that way now if he could get it.

Children now are so different from what they were 75 years ago, says Mr. Mulligan. Now a child of five has as much nerve as a man of twenty had in the old days. When he was a boy they had a large vinegar barrel, behind which he used to hide when anyone was coming and often stay behind it for hours at a time.

In 1864 Mr. Mulligan went to the township of Manvers and started to clear a farm of 320 acres on the 14th con., near Janetville, and for 13 years, or until March, 1877, did some mighty hard work. He thinks if it had not been for these years of hard work he would have been dead long ago. Since 1877 he has resided in Millbrook, where he is most highly respected.

In 1911, when 79 years old he took his first trip across the ocean and visited England, Ireland, Scotland and France; he spent a day in the old house in Ireland, where his father was born nearly 130 years ago, and a relative by the name of Mulligan still lives there. As soon as he made known whose son he was nothing was too good for him in the Emerald Isle, and he had "the time of his life."

EDUCATION AT THE FRONT

(By Major C. J. C. Street, R.G.A., Author of "With the Guns," Etc.)

Throughout the war it has been noticeable that the British soldier has always shown a desire to occupy his spare time in the study of some subject that may be useful to him in after life.

In many cases this study has taken the form of the continuation or completion of an education interrupted by his joining the colours, but in many other cases a man has been encouraged, possibly by rubbing shoulders in the trenches with men better informed than himself, to take up some form of study, with the view of employing the knowledge so acquired in civil life after the war. It must be remembered tha war does not consist wholly of fighting, or even of constant ocupation in definite duties. A soldier has necessarily a certain amount of time at his disposal, in which he can find his own amusement or employment.

The possibilities of amusement at the front are necessarily limited. Notwithstanding the provision of recreation huts, cinemas, and concert parties wherever such things are humanly possible, the soldier who has nothing to occupy his mind must inevitably find time hanging somewhat heavily on his hands. Aimless reading is rather apt to pall; to make books interesting, there must be some object at the back of the reader's mind.

With the double aim of giving the soldier this necessary object, and of preparing him to take his place as a useful citizen upon the declaration of peace, a scheme is now in operation among the troops of the British Expeditionary Force in France for providing definite educational facilities. The authorities responsible for training have appointed an Education Officer for each Corps, whose duties are to superintend and assist by every means in their power the various studies of the troops in that Corps. The Training Branch is one of the most important organizations at the front, it has been the experience of all armies that constant military training is the most important fatcor in the maintainance of the efficiency of the troops. Consequently, the placing of civil education under the direction of the Branch ensures that it will receive full consideration at the hands of everyone concerned.

The Education Officers exercise their functions in two main directions, the establishment of schools, and the delivery of lectures. Of these, the first are known as Active Service Army Schools, and are established at convenient centres under the direct control of the Education Officers. In a citizen army such as the British Army has become, there is no difficulty in finding enthusiastic teachers in nearly every branch of knowledge. Classes have been started in almost every conceivable subject, ranging from foreign languages, through the sciences, to book-keeping, economics, and journalism. Besides these, there are practical courses, conducted by skilled men, possessing the highest qualifications, in nearly every branch of trade and industry. These classes and courses are already immensely popular., and the difficulty is not to find pupils, but to arrange accommodation and provide facilities for them. It must be clearly understood that attendance at any form of educational training is entirely voluntary.

The scheme has found great favour among regimental officers, who have in a very large number of cases started classes in various subjects for their men. The necessary text-books can be obtained through the Educational Officer of the Corps to which they belong. The latter travel round the various units of their corps, giving lectures in billets and even in the line, setting forth the advantages of the courses and explaining the various facilities available. So greatly are these facilities appreciated, that it is no uncommon sight to find an enthusiastic class assembled in a dug-out within a few yards of the hostile trenches.

As a supplement to this scheme of education, a series of pamphlets is in course of preparation, in which, among other subjects of a ninformative nature, the prospects of the soldier upon his return to civil life are described. The aim of these pamphlets is to set out the facts of their subjec abbsolutely free from bias, and to describe them in simple language. Men will be encouraged to read them, and facilities will be provided for their distribution to enquirers.

By these means it is intended that men shall be helped to form a decision as to the course they wish to take upon being released from military service, and also, while still serving, to take the necessary steps to fit themselves for the occupation they wish to adopt.

CATTLE MARKET

Union Stock Yards— Receipts, 27 cars, with 382 cattle, 117 calves, 506 hogs, and 47 sheep and lambs.

The hot weather ruled the cattle market yesterday, with the result that trade was almost at a complete standstill. There was, in fact, but a very light run offering, but the demand was almost nil. A few lots sold at practically no change in prices. Good choice heavy steers, when available, continue in good demand at little firmer prices than last week. The hot weather effect on the local beef trade was evident in the slack demand for butcher cattle of the average quality offering. Anything exceptionally choice, met a good market.

Lambs are firmer, and are again selling around $20 to $21.

Hogs are practically steady, but firm.

PAYS $168 TO HEAR SON'S GOOD-BYE OVER TELEPHONE.

Alameda, California, Aug. 13.—That he might hear his son's voice in farewell before the boy left Alameda for Camp Lewis, Andrew Cummings, of 740 Greeley avenue, Kansas City, Kansas, paid $168 in long distance telephone tolls for the privilege of 46 minutes of two thousand mile conversation with his son. The rate was $11.50 for the first three minutes and $3.75 a minute for each following minute.

The father made arrangement that day for the telephone talk and had his son report to the Alameda telephone office in the afternoon by appointment. The first few minutes the tones were somewhat confusing, but later the voice carried over the two thousand miles in a natural voice, and the son readily recognized the voice of his father. The father paid no heed to the mounting tolls and told the son to keep talking. The war, the weather, and other 'small talk' made up the buzz of words.

The Woman Who Changed

By JANE PHELPS

A LONG TALK

CHAPTER CXLIII.

Mrs. Sexton was gone. She had suffered for weeks, then quietly passed away in her sleep. I was dreadfully grieved. During those last weeks, I had come to know her so well—to realize, more than ever before, the beauty of her character. I had not been well, and, aside from the time spent with her, had been out but very little.

Then, one night, I told George that once more God was good to us—that once more he was to bestow his wonder gift on us.

My husband took me into his arms and held me close while he talked to me. He told me how happy he was that it was so, and how he was going to take care of me.

"And you won't mind if"—

He would not let me finish.

"Put that foolish conversation out of your head. I imagine you did not hear it all, or perhaps you misunderstood much that you did hear. They may have been speaking of some particular man, an isolated case. Men who have a home, who love their wives, want children in that home."

We talked for an hour. When, finally, he put me from him, I felt nearer my husband than ever before; felt there was less danger of misunderstandings and unhappiness, now.

BUSY DAYS.

The days and weeks that followed were happy, busy ones. George took such wonderful care of me. Each day he insisted that I take a ride and a walk. He never came home that he didn't bring me something—a magazine, a book, flowers or candy.

Evelyn and my little namesake were often with me. And Madge Loring had been really kind and friendly. I should have been most ungrateful, had I refused to respond to her kindness, now.

Others, too, people whom I had scarcely thought of as friends, were kind. It kept constantly in my mind what Mrs. Sexton so often said about the best coming back to us, if we gave our best. I had proved it true so often, lately.

I realized, too, that happiness and success in life did not depend so much upon what we have, as upon what we are, and upon the way we try to fill our place in the world.

I no longer thought I would like to be poor and unknown. I loved my beautiful home, and the freedom to do things for others which my husband's wealth gave me. I had begun to get "my stride," as Kurts Reeve once said about himself in business. But I was yet far from satisfied. I realized I still had much to learn, if I were to be the well rounded woman Mrs. Sexton had talked to me about in those last weeks.

But when one really tries to learn, nothing can hinder one's progress. It is only when we go at things half-heartedly, that we do not get along.

A SURPRISE.

I had noticed a peculiar look on George's face, lately—rather a sly sort of look, as if he were doing something he should not.

"You look as if you had some secret, George," I said to him.

"Perhaps I have!" he returned. "But little girls must learn to curb their curiosity."

"Really, am I not to know?" I pretended to pout.

"No, really you are not!"

"I don't believe it is much, anyway," I laughed at him, but I was anxious to know, just the same. He had confessed there was a secret. And he was not inclined to make much of nothing.

I was soon to know. The very next day after our little talk, I heard the honk-honk of the car, and, running to the window, I was just in time to see George help a woman out and then lift out a bag. Who could it be? I glanced quickly into the mirror to see if I was presentable. It was early for George, and I had not yet changed for dinner. I gave my hair a pat, then went out on the landing, and looked over the banisters. I heard voices, but could see no one. Listening, I heard George say:

"You stay here, I'll bring her down."

I hurried back into my room, so that George would not know I had listened. He came in with his face beaming.

"There's a lady waiting to see you in the library," he said, after kissing me, and asking how I felt.

"Who is it?"

"Come down and see," he replied with a laugh, and I followed him.

The lady rose from the depths of an easy chair, as I entered the room.

"Mother!" I cried, and, in a moment, I was clasped in her arms and we were both talking at once.

HARVEST HANDS IN DEMAND TO SAVE WESTERN CROP.

Mr. R. L. Fairbairn, General Passenger Agent, Canadian Northern Railway, Toronto, states that as a result of a conference between their Western representatives and representatives of the Dominion and Provincial Governments at Winnipeg, it has been decided that at least 20,000 Harvesters will be required over and above the local supply of help available to garner the Western wheat crop this year.

An appeal must be made to the East and this help should be timed to reach Winnipeg for distribution to needy points west, from August 20th to September 10th. It is understood that Harvesters' wages this year will be from $3.50 to $4.00 per day with board, for about three months' work.

"Germ-Proof" Money.

To a bank in Spokane, Wash., belongs the distinction of circulating the first antiseptic germ-proof national bank notes. The United States treasury is still experimenting with devices to laundry dirty bank notes to bright crisp ones, but the Spokane bank has the first sanitary money on record. Fifty thousand dollars in bills, put out by the bank, were signed with an ink said to consist largely of carbolic acid. The result is the bills are saturated with an agency which means death to the most vigorous germ who'd live there.

"Well, not quite," replied the truthful child. "She's just sick a sofa."—Chicago Tribune.

A Mysterious Disappearance Solved

By WILLIAM CHANDLER

Some workmen tearing down a building in Paris, on reducing the level of a compartment, closet or something of the kind about big enough for one to stand in upright, came upon a human head. There was hair on it, but, not much. It was more than a skull, yet not exactly a head. As the men went on lowering the walls they revealed a female figure in the clothing of a man, which crumbled as they proceeded downward.

The figure faced an iron door behind wainscoating. A panel was made, or, rather, had been made, to slide sideward, and the door behind it opened inward, leaving sufficient room for the figure to get into the closet and shut the door. There was a latch on the outside. The panel had originally been moved by weights and locked with a secret spring. But both door and panel had been walled up a long while before, and their existence had become unknown.

The master workman sent word of the find to the owner of the building, asking for instructions as to what to do in the matter. The owner came, accompanied by a gentleman wearing the button of the Legion of Honor, and the latter examined both the body and its incasement carefully. He was a professional antiquarian. He advised that the body be buried and began a search for the reason of its having occupied for so long the position in which it was found. In time he published in a Paris magazine the result of his investigations, the following being an abbreviation of a long story:

The building in which the body was found dated back to the reign of Louis XI. In this reign the king increased his power at the expense of the nobles, and the royal authority became absolute. His successors maintained what he had gained, and from that time down to the beginning of the reign of Louis XVI. the government was one of tyranny and intrigue.

In the reign of Louis XIII. plot and counterplot reached their height. The king was a weakling, and Cardinal Richelieu governed virtually in his stead. There were conspiracies against the king, the cardinal and every one connected with the court. At this time the building was occupied by the Marquis de Fontayne, a nobleman who was mixed up with these feuds and joined a coalition consisting of the king's brother and other persons to seize the government. Mlle. Louise de Fontayne, the marquis' daughter, was in love with Rissioli, one of those favorites Catherine de' Medici had brought with her from Italy.

Now, this Rissioli was as black hearted a villain as ever lived. Being implicated in that conspiracy which was the most formidable of all the plots against the king, when it was discovered his name was given to the prime minister as one who must be taken at all hazards. Knowing his influence with Mlle. de Fontayne, he fled to her house and begged her to conceal him.

Louise, who was a noble character, proposed that they exchange clothing. While she was being taken away in his stead he might escape as herself, and upon her identity being discovered she could rely on the influence of her father to save her from punishment for aiding and abetting the escape of one of the king's enemies. Rissioli acceded to this, and the exchange was made.

It was not long after this that the main door of the chateau was thrown open and a party of armed men burst in, seeking the Italian. It was plain that if they found him they would kill him on sight. He had expected this and had realized that whosoever they found personating him would be stabbed to death, but was too contemptible to decline to permit Louise taking this risk. Hearing the clamor below for his blood, he darted away, leaving Louise to her fate.

Louise, realizing that if found in Rissioli's clothes and mistaken for him she would be killed, ran to a secret closet of which she knew and intended for a place of concealment in case of danger. Having removed the panel and opened the door, she stepped into the closet, shutting both behind her.

Rissioli escaped to Italy and was never again seen in Paris. He being the only person with Mlle. de Fontayne when the party came for him and not knowing where she had gone, there was nobody in the secret of her hiding place. After the commotion she was missed. Day after day passed and she did not appear. Indeed, though every effort was made to find her it was unsuccessful.

The antiquary found records of this disappearance of Louise de Fontayne occurring at the time of the discovery of the conspiracy against the king. He also found a statement made by Rissioli giving an account of his being with Louise up to the time the men broke into the house and he and she darted away in different directions. This enabled the searcher of the story to tell it up to that moment.

A careful investigation was made of the apparatus for opening the doors of the closet with a view to determining why the imprisoned girl could not release herself, but so old and decayed were the apparatus and locks that it was impossible to tell why they had not worked. Only a hypothetical solution could be given. The iron door was found closed and locked. For some reason it could not be unlocked, but as to why there was no evidence.

FRICTION REDUCING MOTOR OIL

"Makes a good car better"

For the Camshaft

THE action of the camshaft and timing mechanism largely governs a motor's performance. Their proper action depends on effective lubrication. The oil used must be of proper body to minimize wear. It must be fluid enough to flow between the wearing parts. It must not gum and so retard the rythmic operation of the delicate timing mechanism. For best results it should be Polarine.

HITTING ON EVERY CYLINDER AND WORKING LIKE A CHARM

There's music in the rythmic whirr of a motor that never skips or misses—that hits on every cylinder. It means a steady, dependable flow of power for any hill, speed or load—frictionless harmony with all moving parts correctly lubricated—results assured by the use of

Polarine FRICTION REDUCING MOTOR OIL

Polarine has the right body and lubricating qualities to reduce friction and minimize wear. It never gums in summer nor congeals in winter. It lessens carbon troubles—keeps down repair bills and keeps up car.

Polarine is made in two grades—Polarine and Polarine Heavy. It is supplied in one-half, one and four gallon sealed cans, also in 12½ gallon steel kegs, barrels and half-barrels. There are also Polarine oils and greases for effective transmission and differential lubrication.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Quiet Romance

By Eleen Charlotte Whiteside

At one table in the restaurant loaded down with delicate viands sat Tyrrell Hoyt, man of wealth, leisure and ennui. He was surfeited with the pleasures of life, had picked at this and that dainty with jaded appetite and now sat back, wondering what he had come in for.

At a table opposite was a fair young girl and her aged mother. They were poor, their attire, though neat and clean, showed that, but there was an expression on the wrinkled face telling of a novelty intensely enjoyed, and of pride in the shining eyes of the girl, betraying pleasure at being able to thus vary the monotony of a treadmill life by giving to a beloved mother what she considered a treat.

Tyrrell Hoyt envied the old woman the keen zest with which she enjoyed the meal. Its cost for the two of them would not amount to one-half the charge for his own expensive repast, yet every stage of the modest supper was full of delight to mother and daughter. For the moment at least they were supremely happy. Tyrrell Hoyt sighed involuntarily. Long since the spur of interest, of appreciation had left him. He valued the shallowness of society at its true worth and life had become a bore in most of its aspects. His face grew serious, his eyes humid as the old lady opposite him brought back memories of his own mother.

The young lady noted the expression on his face. It was a token of interest, of veneration, of respect. She recognized and appreciated the fine emotions depicted.

He noted later, when the girl came to pay for the meal, that she fairly depleted her little purse. He experienced a sense of infinite pity and pathos. Some careless waiter had dropped a piece of fruit. The old lady Mrs. Davenal, slipped upon it. She would have fallen to the floor had not Hoyt caught her fragile form.

"I thank you," spoke Mrs. Davenal sweetly. "This is my fiftieth birthday so I am not as steady on my feet as in younger years."

"Your birthday?" repeated Hoyt. "Madam, because you have made think of my own dear dead mother, please allow me to offer a tribute of my interest in so auspicious an event."

Hoyt deftly stepped to the flower stand that was a feature of the restaurant, selected a beautiful cluster of roses and pressed them into the hand of Mrs. Davenal. The quick grateful tears sprung to her eyes.

"Oh, sir!" she fluttered, "it seems as if you are putting the climax to the brightest day of life!"

Irene Davenal uttered a few words of thanks, but they were heartfelt and expressive. She could not ignore the manifest respect in the act of this man, stranger though he was. She took her mother's arm and passed on.

The incident had impressed Hoyt strongly. He was no Haroun al Raschid, but had it not been that to follow these two might have annoyed or alarmed them, he would have sought to learn who they were and where they lived. His soul had lifted, appealed to by this exhibition of motherly tenderness and filial affection. He was filled with a clearer mental atmosphere than he had known for years.

He noticed a card on the table which the pair had just left. Hoyt picked it up and perused it. It bore a name and an address, evidently those of the old lady, given to her by her thoughtful daughter, probably so she would be identified if they became separated and anything happened to her.

Before another day had passed Tyrrell Hoyt had visited the vicinity of the home of the Davenals. He found that the young lady supported her mother by work hard and late in a sewing shop. Her one thought was of her mother, and even that little birthday celebration had drawn seriously on her little money store.

Tyrrell Hoyt put himself in the way of the old lady one day. She paused, as he lifted his hat courteously, recognizing him.

"Surely you are the kind gentleman who gave me my birthday roses," she said. "Oh, sir, they lasted for a week and we pressed and preserved them later. We will not soon forget you."

There was nothing dramatic or unusual in what followed. It was only an everyday romance, with a beautiful ending. Tyrrell Hoyt became a welcome guest at the humble Davenal home. It was the occasion of the first day of vacation loyal, plodding Irene had taken in two years, that he begged of his friends that they would allow him to direct their outing.

He drove them in his automobile for two hours along quiet country roads. He invited them into his country home, in charge of a caretaker. There was a repast on the lawn and then, as the delighted Mrs. Davenal dozed in a hammock, Hoyt strolled with Irene among the gorgeous flower beds of the estate.

"How happy you have made mamma!" spoke Irene feelingly. "This place is an earthly paradise for her after her hard life in the city."

Hoyt drew nearer to her.

"You have but to say the word, Irene," he spoke, his voice sentient with fervent emotion, "and mother shall continue to enjoy her Eden. Is it yes, or no?"

Voice, eyes and soul answered him, and he clasped to his breast his own heart's idol.

TIRED AND DISCOURAGED

Mrs. Warren Randlee, Rothesay, Kings County, N.B., "I have three small children and had to stay in the house all winter. So when spring came I was all run down doing all my work and looking after the children. I felt all tired out, and looked on the gloomy side all the time. I decided to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and the results were most satisfactory. I feel fine now, and am recommending the Nerve Food to others."

A Clever Ruse

By WORTHINGTON LEE

"This is your man," spoke my superior, and he showed me a photograph, and I studied it closely.

"I have memorized the face sufficiently to identify him when I come across him," I said confidently.

"We want this man, Leon Gammert," continued the detective chief, "because all his antecedents and his present associations and methods indicate that he is a foreign spy. Read up our files on this man and try to get the goods on him. It would considerably improve your status here to run this man down."

I bowed, and started for the secret service file room. On my way I bestowed my usual admiring glance upon the stenographer, Miss Ada Ryall. Her return smile, friendly and encouraging, nerved me to hope that I might score a real brilliant stroke of sheer detective genius.

I was a novice in the line, but the pay was good and my especial work, that of running down aliens and slackers, in a measure a patriotic task. This was my first really important commission.

For two months Leon Gammert had evaded every trap set for him. Operatives who had been on his trail reported that he led a quiet life, practically devoid of companionship. He roomed at a respectable boarding house, the only remarkable feature as to such occupancy being that he had the one room it contained in the attic. I went at the task cautiously, intelligently and with hope. My man came and went. He was given out as an agent for an industrial insurance company, and I learned that he was in that employ on a commission basis. I ascertained, however, that he did not bring in much business.

I shadowed Gammert one whole day. All of its working hours were devoted to visiting factories where they employed a large number of foreign workmen. A good many of them belonged to obscure secret societies. I watched Gammert approach and converse with a number of these. This procedure seemed rationally in concurrence with his business. He would address a man, take out a folder describing the insurance company he represented, go over it with the man and hand him his card, to all intents and purposes filling the natural duties of an insurance solicitor.

At the end of a week I had not scored one discovery that Gammert was otherwise than what he represented himself to be. The first Saturday night, however, there arose a circumstance that later led to a distinct clue. I followed Gammert to an obscure little shop occupied by a cobbler where Gammert placed a pair of shoes on the counter. Looking through the windows, as the cobbler undid the package I observed that the shoes were nearly new, yet Gammert left them to be repaired. Monday night he went after them. I thought little of the occurrence until the following Saturday night, when Gammert again repaired to the same shop and went through the same performance. I noted where the cobbler placed the shoes, did not follow Gammert, but waited until the cobbler went away. Then with the aid of a picklock I forced the door and made an examination of those shoes.

"I have him at last!" was my jubilant commentary.

The heels of the shoes unscrewed. They were hollow. In each I found a closely folded paper. It held as many as two hundred names and addresses. The names were those of the men Gammert had visited. Under the insurance solicitor camouflage he had been securing willing agents for the foreign government for whom he was a hired spy.

I hurried to headquarters with my prize. The chief was not there. Then I did a rash thing. I placed the lists in a safe and went alone to arrest Gammert. The door of the attic room was unlocked. I entered and faced my man.

"I am from the secret service," I said, "and you are my prisoner."

Quick as a flash Gammert sprang at me, whirled me about and struck me with some heavy missile. When I came back to consciousness I found myself tied securely to a chair. At a table a dense vapor was arising from a vessel placed over a lamp. My man was gone. In one corner of the room was a cage. All this I noted as I realized that in a few moments the fumes of the vapor would overcome me.

I do not know if it was the intention of Gammert to kill me, or only to place me in a stupor until he got far and fast beyond the city. It was just as I nearly strangled, blinded and helpless that there was a crash. One of the windowpanes was broken in and a carrier pigeon fluttered into the room, doubtless the usual inmate of the cage, and one of Gammert's secret messengers, as was the cobbler, who conveyed his lists to higher-up members of some powerful enemy society.

The dense vapor dissipated, an outlet furnished, and I was soon able to relieve myself of my bonds.

We never found Gammert, but we had the lists which led to the department breaking up one of the most formidable associations of spies in the country.

I was promoted in the service the next week, and the following one Ada consented to become my bride.

OLDEST PARIS NEWSPAPER.

The Journal Des Debats and Napoleon's Famous News Order.

The oldest newspaper in Paris, the Journal des Debats, was one of the cluster of newspapers which sprang into being with the beginnings of popular government in 1789.

It was founded by a printer named Baudoin, and purported to be, as its name shows, a mere chronicle of political events. Owing to its pungent criticisms of men and affairs it soon became one of the most influential of the Paris journals.

In 1805 the paper was compelled by Napoleon to change its name and became the Journal de l'Empire. It was in the course of the correspondence which took place between Napoleon and the editor, Fievee, on the subject of the threatened censorship that the emperor gave the order which has become famous, about the policy of the newspaper, "that it should publish no news unfavorable to the government until the truth was so well known that publication was needless."

After Napoleon's retirement to Elba the paper resumed its old title. It is still edited and printed in the house where it was first started, beside the church of St. Germain de l'Auxerrois, from the tower of which the signal was given for the massacre of St. Bartholomew's eve. Of all the great Paris newspapers it has been the least affected by the modern developments of journalism, and its dignified columns are an encouragement to thoughtful reflection and a serious study of affairs. —London Times.

The Reconciliation.

The doctor was soon at the child's bedside. Remedies were administered; then the agonized pair watched the fight for life—skill and vitality on one side, fierce disease on the other. When at last the struggle ceased the gray dawn of day was looking in at the window. Life had won. The child slept.

"She is all right now," said the doctor, shaking the man's hand, which had gripped his, and feeling his heart grow warmer under the look of mute gratitude the woman turned upon him.

When he had gone the two stood side by side at the baby's crib, listening to her regular breathing. Then with one accord they turned and kissed each other. And in that kiss the icy barrier between them melted away.—Atlanta Constitution.

The King's Order.

A book on Paris quotes an amusing rhyme that was inscribed on an old gate to a cemetery that has now been turned into a garden. This cemetery, which adjoined the Church of St. Medard, was long a place of pilgrimage on account of the wonder-working influence ascribed to the tomb of the Abbe Paris. Finally, in 1732, the cemetery was closed by order of Louis XV. The lampoon satirizing the order was as follows:

"De par le Roi, defense a Dieu De faire miracle en ce lieu."

(By order of the king, the Lord is forbidden to work miracles in this place.)

THAT SON-IN-LAW OF PA'S——The Sacrifice Was All Pa's — By Wellington

"HER BOY" A GIFT

Supreme Sacrifice for Country Made Willingly.

Spirit of American Women Manifested in Statement of One Who Had Been Called On to Give Up All She Had.

It was in a Red Cross workroom Somewhere in New York City. The Limelight woman moved around among the workers and talked incessantly.

"My boy has gone to France," she said mournfully. "I can't get reconciled. It doesn't seem right for a mother to devote years to the raising of a boy only to have him snatched away in the twinkling of an eye. I am patriotic enough, goodness knows—I am willing to give everything, within reason, to my country, but I can't help but be thankful that we were able to get our other two boys exempted. I think all mothers feel that way, don't you, Mrs. Smith? It's the 'mother' in us."

She wiped away some tears and slowly rolled a bandage.

"It is easy enough for those who have no sons to preach these high ideals," answered Mrs. South in sympathy. "I am really not dependent upon my son, but if I can keep him from going by putting in that claim, I certainly shall do it. I think it is every mother's right to save her son for herself if she can. Don't think I'm not patriotic. I am working every minute in some sort of war relief work. Indeed I have no use for these unpatriotic women. What do you think, Mrs. Sawyer?"

A frail little woman in a chair by the window looked up from her work with glowing eyes.

"My boy is in France, and I am glad of it," she said simply.

"Your boy?" came in voices in unison.

"Yes, my boy. My sister died when Jack was two weeks old, and I have had him ever since. He was such a dear little fellow, such a dependable boy as he grew older, and such a comfort when he reached his manhood. . . . He has been to me what sweetheart, husband and children have been to you. We were just beginning to feel that life was easier when our country entered the war. For three evenings after the president's war message he sat without talking. I knew what was on his mind, so the fourth evening I told him not to think about it any more, but just go. He said: 'But you, auntie, you deserve some ease now. You have done so much for me, and you have had such a hard fight to make both ends meet.' I said, 'Nonsense, the fight never hurt me. What if the mothers of Washington and Grant had wept and wailed and kept them at home? No, my boy, I want you always to do a man's part, no matter where it takes you or where it leaves you.' He has gone, and I am glad that he has. I couldn't bear to have some other woman's boy protecting me. If Jack does not come back, I shall still be glad he went—for I didn't loan my boy to my country. I gave him."

There was silence in the workroom. The Limelight woman was staring straight ahead of her. Mrs. South hesitated for a moment, then leaned forward and tenderly patted the work-roughened fingers which stitched so steadily.

"Thank you," was all she said.

Ships Must Have Wireless.

Every ocean steamer that leaves an American port is required by law to have wireless telegraph apparatus and operators. An act of congress, passed in 1910, made it unlawful for any ocean-going steamer carrying passengers to leave or attempt to leave any port of the United States without being equipped with an efficient apparatus for radio communication, in good working order, in charge of a person skilled in the use of such apparatus, which apparatus is capable of transmitting and receiving messages over a distance of at least one hundred miles, night or day. After the Titanic disaster, in 1912, this act was amended by providing that "the radio equipment must be in charge of two or more persons skilled in the use of such apparatus, one or the other of whom shall be on duty at all times while the vessel is being navigated." The provision for two skilled operators was to cover the possibility of one being overworked.

Always a Way.

Some small girls were skipping rope on an East side street yesterday afternoon. The children skipped and twisted in turn, while a little mother, with a sleeping baby in her arms, looked on wistfully. There seemed no place to lay the baby, and the other little girls were far too thrilled to think of offering to relieve her to her charge while she tried her prowess. Finally she could stand it no longer. Casting around in desperation she spied one of the iron barrels provided by the city for refuse paper, and thereby solved her problem. Quickly the barrel was turned on its side, the papers pulled toward the top to make a soft bed, and the baby deposited therein. Gently it rocked in its improvised cradle, sleeping peacefully on.—New York Times.

After the Wedding.

Bridegroom—I haven't seen anything of that $1,000 check from your father."

Bride—You see, dear, papa heard that your father had already given us one and he knew we wouldn't want any duplicate gifts, so he's going to send us a silver tray.

"Home Ways"

By Charlotte Winifred Whitaker

As the boys and girls of the Bell family grew up and went away from home, no lapse of time disassociated from their memory the oldtime flavors and scents. From preference they carried away with them a cherished bag of bergamot or sweet lavender. They never ate an apple but they recalled the soft enticing smell that pervaded bureau drawers, whose mother hid away the choicest pippins. As to the food flavors, savory, parsley, sage, mint, thyme, dill, nasturtium, banquet fowl, pickle or salad never equaled the tingle or tang of home-developed esculents.

Lily, sweet sunshine-hearted Lily Bell, was the last left in the dear home nest. There were broad acres, property in the village and solid bond investments, but John Bell clung to the accustomed but generous way of living and every corner of the old homestead was a cherished sanctuary. And now Lily was going to the city to visit her married brother.

"And remember, Lily," her mother said to her, "don't forget to go and see Bridget Cross. Never neglect that humble friend."

"Oh, mother! I shall be delighted to see her. You know she wrote us about the herbs and all that."

"The herbs are all ready now, dear," said Mrs. Bell.

Some years back Bridget Cross appeared in the little town, a sickly, ailing woman, looking for work. She had been cook, housekeeper and maid in the city, but failing health had caused her to lose her position. Kind-hearted Mrs. Bell had taken pity on her and gave her a position with light kitchen work.

Soon kindness, the pure country air and good food began to have their effect upon Bridget. As she grew back into her old strong self, she developed an ability and diligence that fully made up for her first weak efforts. As a cook she exercised a skill that fairly surprised her mistress. Bridget won the hearts of all with the rare excellence of the meals. The collection of home-raised herbs always at hand enchanted her. Her gravies, dressings and salads vied in delicacy and flavor with the masterpieces of famous city chefs. Bridget initiated Lily into all these mysteries of cooking, but, offered a lucrative position with a city family of wealth, left the Bells.

Lily wrote to her at odd times. Bridget responded, and in every letter deplored her inability to get the fresh rare flavoring herbs of the country. Lily, after her arrival at her brother's home, was too fully engrossed in the wonderland of first city experience to think of anything else. The second morning, however, she started out to visit Bridget. She was somewhat awed to reach a sumptuous mansion.

Bridget was queen supreme of the kitchen quarters of the Mervin home. She had her own neat roomy apartment and she welcomed Lily as though she were a long-absent daughter.

"If you can make room for me I am to stay all day and until tomorrow morning," Lily announced. "Oh! It seems so good to see your cheery, smiling face, and how well you are looking!"

"My little lamb!" said Bridget, "I have counted the hours ever since you wrote me you were coming."

What a chat they had all that day! It seemed as if Mrs. Cross would not be content until Lily had told her everything that had happened at the old homestead since she had left, even to the last brood of chickens. In turn Lily was intensely interested to know about the Mervin family.

"They are very kind to me," Bridget averred, "if they are real high-up aristocrats. There's old Mr. Mervin and his wife, and Gerald, the son, who comes and jokes with me and treats me as if I were some old friend," and Bridget built up in the mind of Lily a very high opinion of this estimable young man.

It seemed that old Mr. Mervin had invited some eminent guests to dinner that day and Bridget was anxious to excel herself in her cookery. Lily insisted on proving that she had not forgotten her culinary tutelage of the past—indeed, she was allowed to cook the roasts and prepare the salads and gravies, and the flavoring herbs she had brought played a prominent part in the same.

Lily, arrayed in a great enveloping apron dress Bridget had loaned her, was putting some tins in their place the next morning, when a hearty but musical voice startled her.

"Mrs. Cross, you have made father supremely happy. The guests last evening, and some of them are noted bon vivants, sat discussing your delightful dishes for half an hour—pardon me! I took you for Mrs. Cross," and Bridget rushed in to explain, and Lily blushed at the encomiums the faithful old friend passed on herself and her father and mother. Bridget was voluble and Gerald Marvin received the whole history of Lily's visit.

"My machine shall be at your service," said Gerald. "I will be pleased to drive you to your brother's home."

"Gerald, you must be mad, to think of engaging yourself to a poor country girl!" spoke out Mrs. Mervin, a month later.

"Mother mine," returned Gerald, "the Bells could buy us out twice over. Besides that, I love Lily," and that ended it.

NO JOBLESS IN BERLIN.

But Munition Workers Are Being Steadily Called to the Colours.

Following the publication in Holland and the cabling to this country of a report quoting a representative of the German Metal Workers' Union as saying that there were 30,000 munition workers idle in the German capital, the Berliner Tageblatt of July 9, a copy of which has just been received here, printed the following statement given to it by a "competent" authority:

"There can be no question of a dismissal of the munition workers. It it were asserted at the annual meeting of the German Metal Workers' Union that at present there are some 30,000 fewer persons employed in the Berlin munition factories than was the case a few months ago, this fact is of no importance whatever. In the great host of munition workers employed in Berlin the number of 30,000 cuts no figure at all. And then there is the increasing severity with which persons are being called to the colours and the fact that in summer quite a large number of men and women go back to the country. The munition workers would naturally be needed just as pressingly as before, and therefore there could be no question of unemployment in Berlin. The War Office authorities are instructed to see to it that workers released from one place are to find employment at once in another place."

GERMANS ARE IN PLEMONT

Enemy Resistance Is Stiffening—French Advanced Two Miles Yesterday.

DESPERATE DEFENSE

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES, August 14.—The Germans are now in Plemont, about a mile southeast of Lassigny, where they retreated following the new advance by the French, General Hubert's army moved forward two miles yesterday and took St. Claude Farm, which makes the hold of the French on the southern part of Thiescourt secure.

Progressing Slowly.

General Hubert's army operating on the southern end of the Picardy battle line, is reported to be progressing slowly towards Noyon.

The desperate German defense of the Chaulnes-Roye road has caused delay in the strong Noyon position which is now said to be impending. The army of General Rawlinson, which is holding the line just to the north of the French positions, is meeting with the most desperate resistance along its whole front. The Germans are determined to retain Chaulnes Heights at all costs.

C.G.E. EMPLOYEES ASK FOR GRADING BASED ON WORK

After a prefatory review this morning of the points in dispute between the C.G.E. Company and their mechanics and machine operators, the arbitration board composed of Judge Snider of Hamilton, Mr. J. G. Merrick, representing the company and Mr. Fred Bancroft, of Toronto, the employees' representative, settled down to a detailed discussion this afternoon. One of the questions at issue is the grading or classification of the men. Mr. F. H. Harper, who presented their case, argued that the ability to do the work of machinists and toolmakers should be the only definitive factor, and not considerations of apprenticeships. Some of the men were doing the work of machinists, using the term in the company's meaning, but they were not receiving the regular wages paid to machinists. Hence the men asked for a broader classification on the work they do instead of on apprenticeship

Judge Snider asked who would decide on the class of quality of the work. If the apprenticeship system were abandoned, the test substituted must be practicable and definite.

Mr. Merrick remarked that, in the Canada Cycle and Motor Company dispute, it was demanded by employees that everybody in the tool room should be classed as a toolmaker. He asked Mr. Harper if this claim was put forward by the C.G.E. men.

"We are not asking that the sweepers be regarded as toolmakers or machinists as the case might be," Mr. Harper replied. "We hold that if a man is doing the work of a toolmaker, then he should be so classed and paid."

KING GEORGE INSPECTED VARIOUS CENTRES OF MILITARY ACTIVITY, ALSO SOME OF THE AMERICAN TROOPS

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, August 14.—King George has returned to England from a nine-days' trip to the British front in France, during which time he inspected various centres of military activity, passing at times through places which were under the enemies' fire. Among the many reviews held by the King was one of some American troops who heartily cheered His Majesty. King George talked with Generals Pershing and Bliss and other American officers, and expressed great admiration with the splendid physique of the troops. He complimented them on their eagerness for the fray, and their fine work in helping to drive the Germans back from the Marne.

Chinaman Smoked Opium to Cure Attacks of Asthma

Novel Defence In Police Court This Morning Freed Lee York of Charge of Having Opium in His Possession—Was Addicted to It Ten Years Ago.

HAS NOT FULLY RECOVERED

That opium may be kept for lawful and reasonable uses was adduced in police court this morning when Lee York was discharged of having in his possession a drug, opium, prepared for smoking. It was a loophole in the Act that Mr. J. A. O'Brien found to fit the condition and the extremity of his client whose store on Charlotte street was raided by the police on Sunday night. It was brought out that York was an addict of opium and although he was breaking its hold on him he suffered at times from the effects of the drug and recurring asthma was relieved by smoking a pill or two of "hop."

Mr. O'Brien argued that the exception provided in the law was intended for persons who had been enslaved by the drug that the physical craving and mental distress that followed their deprivation of the dope.

The unusual defense was supported sufficiently to satisfy Magistrate Dumble who dismissed the case.

P. C. DAINNARD'S EVIDENCE.

P. C. Dainnard testified that the store at 217½ Charlotte street, opposite the Curling Rink, had been known for several months as a Chinese club. When the police raided it last Sunday night he heard a shuffling inside before the door was unlocked. "We asked the proprietor where the opium was. He replied, 'We do not smoke now; we quit about two weeks ago.' He said that he had no opium nor a pipe. In a few moments we found the pipe, which was hidden underneath the table on two nails. P. C. Boyd discovered on opium jar in a drawer of the counter. Acting-Sergt. Lawrence found the bowl of the pipe, and the lamp. We put Yee York and the frequenters under arrest and brought them to the police station."

There was a wide bunk in the room, on which three or four men could lie. It was provided with wooden pillows.

"On August 5th I visited the Chinese Club with Sanitary Inspector Stapleton. There were two men then sleeping on the bunk."

Mr. O'Brien—"We are prepared to admit that the police found opium that can be smoked, but I'm not admitting that it is prepared for smoking."

Mr. Hatton—"Do you admit that this is an opium pipe?"

Mr. O'Brien—"Yes."

Mr. Hatton—"What about the lamp?"

Mr. O'Brien——"No; we won't admit that it was used for smoking."

Mr. Hatton—"It's not used for frying potatoes."

P. C. Dainnard told Mr. O'Brien that the police had made two tripe to the tea store. In the first they got the pipe stem, lamps and two Chinamen.

Mr. O'Brien—"Do you know that anybody else had a key?

P. C. Dainnard—"No."

When the police entered the store they noticed a strange, pungent smoke. It was not tobacco, P. C. Dainnard said, but he couldn't swear that it was opium because he wasn't familiar with it. The police had been watching the place for two months.

Attacking the suggestion that part of the haul might have been "planted" in the time between the two trips of the police, Mr. Hatton adduced the fact that the articles found in the second trip were located in places that had not been examined before.

P. C. Boyd, from his experience in 15 or 20 raids on opium "dives," declared that the lamp seized in the OIL TANKER SUNK AT ENTRANCE TO NEW YORK HARBOUR.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

NEW YORK, Aug. 14. — The Associated Press this morning carries the following: German submarines approaching the very gates of New York Harbour sank oil tanker Frederick R. Kellogg, off the Ambrose Channel last night. Thirty-five members of the crew, brought here to-day, reported that seven others are missing. These survivors were picked up by an American steamship. The Frederick R. Kellogg was a new tank ship of 4,450 tons owned by the Pan-American Petroleum and Transport Co. of Los Angeles. She was 425 feet long with beam of 57 feet and was built at Oakland, Cal., last year. The tanker was commanded by Captain White, and was bound from San Pedro, Mexico, for Boston.

French Are Moving North

The Allies Are Advancing Steadily —Enemy Morale Shaky.

(By Lowell Mellett—United Press.)

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES IN THE FIELD, Aug. 14.—General Humbert, following the successful advance of his right wing in the Oise Valley, is now striking northward in that region, almost at the right angle to the main battle front.

This operation is now fully under way, the French, infiltrating the ravines between the tiny hills, few of which are more than 150 feet high, and which give this section its name of "Little Switzerland." The French already possess Plessier and L'Ecouvilleon, the keys to this region. The advance is careful, because of the great quantities of mustard gas with which the Germans flooded the depression and their abandoned trenches, but it is steady.

Now a Saw Tooth.

The French line is now of a saw tooth nature, owing to the peculiarities of the terrain.

Prisoners taken by a French division now before Belval (a mile and a half directly south of Lassigny) are responsible for the capturing of German commands and orders. These prisoners, consisting of 177 men and seven officers from seven different companies, added to the increasing testimony of the shakiness of the German army's morale.

The Boche soldiers' spirit is almost gone. East of Muizon an escort was taking back a German prisoner. Enemy shells began falling all around. The Poilu took refuge in a shell hole. The prisoner clung to the Poilus' coat tails, begging in broken French, "Don't leave me; or the Boches (his own word) will get me again."

PRINCE IN A STORM

Prince Arthur of Connaught Was Buffetted About on Lake Ontario Last Evening.

BARNS STRUCK

Canadian Press:

TORONTO, Aug. 14.— In addition to the buffetting received by Prince Arthur of Connaught and his party on Lake Ontario, in a small launch last evening, the electrical storm which skirted Lake Ontario and Toronto, caused severe wire damage. The lightning freakishly split and also smashed forty-five poles in the vicinity of Milton. Telegraphic communication between Toronto and many points in Western Ontario were cut off for from ten to fifteen hours. Lightning struck barns in several counties, but little other damage has been reported up till noon to-day.

AUTOMOBILE HIT BY C.P.R. EXPRESS AT STEWART STREET

A fatality was narrowly averted at the C.P.R. crossing on Stewart street near the Lundy Shovel and Tool Company yesterday afternoon. Mr. Frank White, engineer on the C.P.R. yard engine, was driving north in an automobile. The easterly view was shut off by the factory, and as a result he did not see the approaching express until within a short distance of the main tracks. The Toronto train was beginning to work up speed at that point, but apparently there was no warning that Mr. White heard. He stopped his car in a flash, but the engine struck the radiator and pushed the automobile to one side of the road. Its other occupants were Mrs. White, her sister and two children. The train stopped under the application of the emergency brakes within a few yards.

The automobile showed a dented hood and other damage, none of which was serious. Thanks to Mr. White's prompt action a serious accident was avoided, but the escape served none the less to emphasize the danger that lurks at this crossing.

THE HOUSING PROBLEM.

Sheep Raising and Its Relation to Cottage Accommodation.

Just now we are suffering from a dearth of cottages brought about in many ways—the condemnation of old insanitary dwellings which are not replaced, owing to circumstances and influences which discourage building, and the ease of communication which allows workers in the city to live in the country. But this lack of cottage accommodation, writes Ernest C. Pullbrook in the Treasury, is no new thing; the Black Plague indirectly developed our wool trade, as it was found that the raising of sheep required less labour and was more profitable, with the result that all over the country where conditions were favourable tillage was converted into pasture. Cottages were pulled down to make room for the sheep-runs. In the reign of Henry the Eighth Parliament put a stop to this by fixing the number of sheep a farmer might keep. Evidently these measures led to the reopening of the countryside, for a great rtvival of cottage building took place—in fact, it became necessary to regulate it, and one of Queen Elizabeth's Parliaments passed an Act that no country cottage should be erected unless four acres of land were allotted to it—a sort of Small Holdings Bill. — Family Herald.

French Took Prisoners in a Raid in the Champagne District—Local Fighting.

OFFICIAL REPORTS

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PARIS (Official), Aug. 14.—Only the artillery was active during the night on certain sectors between the Avre and the Oise, along the Vesle where French and American troops are stationad. The Germans made vain raids. The French took prisoners in a raid in the Champagne district.

THE STATEMENT READS.

Between the Avre and the Oise there was activity by our own and enemy artillery, notably in the sectors of Roye-Sur-Matz and Chochy-Les-Pots. On the front of the Vesle German raids were without results. Prisoners were taken by the French during an incursion into the German lines in the region of Mesnil-Les-Hurlus. The night was calm everywhere else.

BRITISH OFFICIAL.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, Aug. 14.—(Official.)—British troops have gained further ground at the apex of the Lys salient in Flanders. East of Meteren the line was advanced slightly while east of Vieux-Berquin south of Meteren patrols established a new line.

THE STATEMENT READS.

Hostile artillery was active during the night on the battle front. There was no infantry action. At mid-day yesterday local hostile attacks in the Dickebusch sector were repulsed. During the night the enemy artillery has shown considerable activity in this neighbourhood and also against our positions northwest of Kemmel. We secured prisoners last night in a successful raid in the neighbourhood of Ayette. In the Vieux-Berquin sector our patrols have continued to pass forward, and have succeeded in establishing a line east of the village. A number of prisoners and machine guns were captured in the course of the operation. Our line has been advanced slightly east of Meteren.

No Change.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, August 14.—There was no infantry fighting during the night on the British sector of the Picardy battle front. German artillery was active. On Tuesday the British threw back the German local attacks on the northern side of the Lys salient. Last night the German artillery was very active in this region.

There was no change in the situation on the new Somme battle front this morning except for the fact that a considerably increased artillery fire indicates that the enemy has finally decided to bring up more of his guns.

Temperature Was 98 Yesterday

Few Hotter Days In Past 25 Years.

With but two or three exceptions no higher temperature has been experienced in Peterboro for a quarter of a century than what we had yesterday afternoon. As noted in our little paragraph of yesterday, it was 92 degrees at noon, and the remark was made that it was still rising. The temperature rose until it reached 98 degrees, shade temperature, about 3.30 p.m. Even higher temperatures may have been recorded in some of the down-town sections. On August 20 and 21, 1916, we had it 99 degrees both days; and on July 5, 1911, the record of the even 100 was made. These three days are the only ones in recent years that have exceeded yesterday's heat. A very hot spell occurred from August 5 to 11, 1900, when the figures ranged from 94 to 97 daily. The thunderstorm that passed over in the evening brought some relief. Rainfall .23 of an inch.—W.P.

BATTLE IS RAGING BETWEEN THE CZECHS AND THE BOLSHEVIKI.

(Special to The Examiner.)

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 14. — A battle is raging between the Czecha-Slovak and Bolsheviki forces along the Middle Volga, especially around Simbirsk, according to despatches from Germany to-day.

The Soviet army is said to number 150,000. The Soviet fleet on the Volga has seized all Czecho-Slovak vessels, breaking the latter's communication with their headquarters at Simbirsk.

Germans Are Very Uneasy

Are Trying to Find Out Where Foch Will Land Next Blow.

(By Webb Miller—United Press.)

PARIS, Aug. 14. —While the Germans have regained their equilibrium in Picardy, at least temporarily, and apparently are determined to make a stand on the Bray-Roye-Lassigny-Noyon line, they are showing visible jumpiness on the whole front. They are trying, by small raids for prisoners and persistent air reconnaissance, to find out where Marshal Foch's next punch will land. On widely separated fronts they are seeking to ascertain what new dose the Allies are mixing for them and where it will be administered.

Meanwhile, Foch is keeping them up in the air by exerting strong pressure at vital points in the German line.

Military experts are speculating as to whether Foch will exploit his gains in Picardy to the utmost by another attack, or will merely keep the enemy busy there while delivering another blow elsewhere. Most of them are inclined to the latter view.

"Plain Murder," Said A. Chernikoff When Fined $8.10 To-day

"This is plain murder," moaned A. Chernikoff when fined $8.10 this morning for failure to give the right of way to another automobile at the corner of Charlotte and George streets. His car is beginning to run away with some of the profits of his 'new and second hand good store," as this is the second breach of the traffic bylaw in a comparatively short time. E. B. Flannagan paid $10 for speeding.

LLOYD GEORGE'S PART.

Better than the taste of victory are the accumulating evidences of perfect co-ordination of the Allied forces. In this unity and harmony is the promise of continued success, and while to Gen. Foch is accorded the praise and gratitude of the Allied nations, there should be full recognition of the service of Lloyd George who, in "going over the top" at Versailles gave Britain's assent to a unified command. The Premier routed the military clique, too long dominant, and expressed the British people's unselfish alliance by subordinating their armies and staff to the French Generalissimo. This was the moral victory, political, too, that freed the genius of Foch, and contributed so largely to our recent bouleversement of the German's plans. Lloyd George's decision was consonant with the spirit of Britain's sacrifices from the first day of war, and while our hearts are raised by victory they also find a great comfort and strength in reflecting upon the tangible results of the conference at Versailles and our part therein.

IS THIS SANITARY.

The drinking fountain at the City Hall is supposed to be sanitary and probably is, otherwise the Board of Health would doubtless have remedied a condition that repels many a thirsty but somewhat scrupulous citizen. Two streams originally spurted three inches or more; now they are little better than a trickle. Formerly, the drinker caught the water at its highest point, his lips well removed from the bowl and the spout. Now, it is common for moustaches to be buried into the white cup as the lips stretch downward toward the weak flow of water, and many persons even mouth the spout as unsanitarily as they did the old brass cups. Another method observed is to close the bottom of the cup by pressing one hand around it, turn the water on, and drink from this extemporized container. It will be admitted that such uses were never intended when the fountain was erected, and the authorities would surely be serving the health of the city by injecting a little more force into the stream.

THE GAME OF BOWLS.

Lawn bowling has become one of the established institutions of Canada and it is safe to affirm that no other diversion affords more healthy or beneficial amusement for members of all classes and all ages. A healthy octogenarian can play it with as much zest as the youth of seventeen and both derive equal pleasure from the sport. It is a great leveller and has none of the exclusive elements associated with golf because that great game requires time, and means which ordinary individuals cannot afford. And, blessed thought, there is no hunting round for a lost ball or other strains on the bad language department. In addition bowling is the one open air pastime which can be followed at night, and with regard to which shortening days constitute no interference whatever. As to its ancient origin there cannot be any doubt for the Bible records that Balaam addressed himself to a Jack and Drake finished a game while the Spanish Armada was in the offing. There is scarcely in Ontario so small a place that a green cannot be found, and for the Dominion tournament opening in Toronto this week no fewer than seven hundred players have entered. A good bowler is a good fellow, he learns to give and take and there is no body checking to stir up otherwise amicable feelings, albeit he must possess a keen eye and good judgment if he is to give a successful account of himself with regard to the ever varying ends.—Brantford Courier.

OUR TECHNICAL SCHOOL.

The "dog days" are probably an unacceptable season to revive a discussion of the establishment of a technical school in Peterborough, but a similar movement in St. Catherines serves as a reminder that this city should not be content with inaction. The Public school and Collegiate Institute Boards of St. Catharines, Thorold and Merriton are considering a joint technical school for the three municipalities. Peterborough has already filled its committee, but the initiative rests there. The project has apparently been shelved.

The service of a technical school to Peterborough is thoroughly appreciated, and no section of the community is more interested than the Trade Unions represented in the Labour Council. Mechanics must recall the fact that in the years before the war Germans found the shops of Peterborough and other industrial centres offering to them the best positions and the highest wages. Generally speaking, these strangers were skilled at their trades, and behind their expert work was undoubtedly the special training they had undergone in the highly developed technical schools in Germany.

To-day, these schools are probably stripped of their students and apprentices, but the buildings, equipment and perhaps the staffs, too, are waiting for the restoration of peace, and the resumption of the work of equipping the German youth as mechanical specialists and experts. For this generation at least there will be no German infiltration in our factories, but Germany with specially trained men will surely endeavour to regain the high position she had won in the industrial world. The competition she would then be able to exert would be felt by the workers of Canada, in common with those of other nations.

Having helped win the war, as we sincerely hope we shall win it, Canadians will find themselves engaged in an industrial struggle as keen and persistent as before. Germany, it may be assumed, will be fully prepared to train her youth in the trades of peace at least, as thoroughly as she trained them before. England is reorganizing her educational systems. The United States is not overlooking her deficiencies, and Canada should be prepared.

The incentive to the greatest effort this country can put forward in the technical and general education of her youth is the right our soldiers have won for them to the industrial fruits of peace. Efficient workmen will make flourishing manufacturies, a secure place in the world's markets, hiving industry, high wages and a prosperous and happy people. This is the prize, and efficiency in the shops is an effective instrument with which to secure it.

Hence, technical schools should be established throughout Canada; and Peterborough cannot afford to stand idle while St. Catharines and other cities are planning and building.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

An Ottawa despatch informs the public that Hon. N. W. Rowell has taken a house in the Capital. "Second storey" men are completely outclassed by the President of the Council.

The United States push their war financing even to a fault. It seems unjust that Americans resident in Canada should be taxed by both countries.

The sunny side of Charlotte street west of George, yesterday afternoon seemed like the blazing approach to the "broad gate and the big fire."

Correspondents report that Gen. Foch looks twenty years younger. That's nothing; look at the change in Ald. Edgar.

The daughter of the Prime Minister of France is to marry a sergeant. There is something heartening in this touch of the democratic spirit though it is so remote as France. Evidently the lack of a "Sam Brown" is not so serious a social deficiency as in circles nearer home.

To make certain that the churches and the people have not already neglected the duty we may offer a little Te Deum for the enemy's defeat and complete embarrassment.

HOW THE CHAUTAUQUA IS MANAGED

Morning, Afternoon and Evening—Full Programme Provided for Both Young and Old.

The person who misses the Chautauqua programme in Peterborough from August 16th to 22nd, will miss one of the best educational treats that has ever come to Peterborough in the way of complete varied programme. It is really a travelling University, and the entire programme from its beginning, next Friday the 16th, until the 22nd, offers such a variety of entertainment, lectures, music and play, that it is never tiring. Reports to hand from the different towns in Ontario where the Chautauqua is now playing, tell us that hundreds of citizens have never missed a single bit of the programme, so fascinating has it been.

The entire programme is in the hands of the Chautauqua people from Friday to its close. The mornings are taken up by what is known as the Junior Chautauqua. This is for the boys and girls from 6 to 14 years of age. It begins each morning, except Sunday, at 9 o'clock, and is in full charge of a Junior leader, specially trained for this work. The work for the boys and girls is both entertaining and educational. They are taught to sing patriotic songs, play different games and contests, and are also trained for a pageant which the juniors will give on the last afternoon of the programme. In the educational work for the boys and girls, an indication of the line this will follow is in the governing of the city. The boys and girls constitute themselves the citizens; they elect their mayor, their aldermen, and the different civic officials, and in this way get a training as to the duties, etc., of civic officials. They know what is expected of each of the departments, possibly better than some of us grown-ups understand it to-day. The children's tickets ($1.00) admit, of course, to the afternoon and evening programme as provided for adults. The meetings for the boys and girls will be held in the big tent on the grounds where the evening meetings are also held.

One of the programmes which we hope none of the boys and girls will miss, is the one on the evening of the second last day. It is one of Shakespeare's plays, entitled, "The Comedy of Errors," put on by the well known Ben Greet Players, who have given this not only here in America, but very extensively in the Old Country. The writer had the pleasure of seeing this at the Galt Chautauqua last week, and it is very fine indeed. The scene is laid in Greece. To a Greek father and mother were born two sons —twins, who were so alike that they could never be told apart except when they answered to their names. To another Greek father and mother were also born at the same time two other sons, twins, and who also could not be told apart except as they answered to their name. The wealthy Greek father purchased the two latter boys in order that he might have a servant for each of his sons. Shortly after this the six of them set off on a voyage by ship. In the wreck of the boat, which followed, they were separated and landed at different places, one of the boy's servants being with each of the wealthy sons. The story is put on then in the play is the re-union of all again in the city of Ephesus years later, when the boys are grown to manhood, and the many ludicrous situations which arise by the father and mother and the servants not being able to distinguish the boys and their servants from each other when they meet under different circumstances in the city of Ephesus. Every boy and girl in Peterborough will thoroughly enjoy this play.

WHAT OTHER EDITORS SAY

A Comparison in Slaughter.

(New York World.)

It is stated that a survey of a tract of woods south of the Marne where the Germans struck the American lines last Monday reveals over 5,000 German dead. This is nearly double the Union killed at Gettysburg and more than were killed on the Union side in ten days of fighting around Spottsylvania court house in 1864, which so horrified the North. Germany is bleeding to a degree probably unexampled in modern times.

Exceptional Opportunity.

(Exchange.)

Advertisement: "Wanted — Office boy, to learn insurance business. No salary at first, but if service is satisfactory this will be doubled later."

Superior Speed.

(Detroit News.)

"Boys," says Ludendorff, "the German soldier excels the foe in every particular; now show 'em how fast you can run."

Imaginary Possessions.

(New York Sun.)

The Germans still talk about their colonies in spite of the patent fact that they haven't any . . . unless they have some secret colonies somewhere.

The Pacifists.

(Winnipeg Free Press.)

Scratch a pacifist and you find a pro-German who consciously or unconsciously, for cash or cussedness, is doing the kaiser's work. You have not to scratch deep, either.

No Reason.

(Hamilton Herald.)

There would appear to be about as much reason why Canadian Conservatives should hold banquets now to celebrate the political victory of 1911 as there is why the Liberals should forgather to celebrate their victory in 1896. That is, none at all.

VICTORY LOAN ALMOST EQUAL TO THE DOMINION CURRENCY

Canadian Earnings at Home More Than Equal Cost of War to Her, Says Sir Thomas White—What the Victory Loan Did.

NOT AN UNMIXED EVIL

Canada is earning at home the money she spends on the war, and owing to her agricultural and other natural resources, skilfully worked and ably directed, has been able as a nation not only to earn the entire cost of the war to date but to make a very large increase in wealth as well.

In a review of Canada's excellent financial position at present, coupled with a note or two of caution for the future, Sir Thomas White, Minister of Finance, sets forth the above facts in a statement given out to the press.

Sir Thomas further announces the probability that before the next big war loan is issued for subscription securities of the last Victory Loan issue will stand well above their original cost.

The statement of the Finance Minister says, in part:

"I desire for the information of the public to briefly review the outstanding features of the finances of the Dominion since the beginning of the year.

STABILIZATION SUCCESSFUL.

"The unprecedented success of the Victory Loan of last November was followed by an anxious period as to the market price which would obtain for the new securities. It would have been a most serious matter if the price on our exchanges had declined several points, as seemed probable, if so large a volume of securities as $400,000,000 had been listed on our various markets without provision for support or fresh distribution. Such a decline would especially have discouraged new and inexperienced investors, many of whom would, without full appreciation of technical market conditions, have drawn erroneous conclusions as to the cause of the decline, and become discouraged as to future investment in Dominion issues. The loss to those who from time to time would find it necessary to realize on their securities, would have been heavy. To meet these contingencies a plan of stabilization was arranged for in January, which has worked out most admirably. Over $50,000,000 of Victory Loan securities have been traded in since then.

"To-day any investor is able, without delay, to realize for his Victory Loan bonds what he paid for them. The probability is that before the next issue is made securities of the last Victory Loan issue will stand well above original cost. In liquidity the Victory Loan issue is almost equal to the Dominion's currency.

NOT AN UNMIXED EVIL.

"Adverse exchange is not an unmixed evil to a country at war. Economically speaking it is the natural correction of national extravagance, and of unduly large outside investment of funds needed for war issues at home.

"It cannot be too sharply emphasized or too frequently drawn to the attention of the Canadian public, that our military effort at the front and our prosperity at home, which enables us to continue to sustain it, depend largely upon our finances—that is to say, upon the ability of the public to make and save money, and lend it to the government in return for war loan securities.

WHAT VICTORY LOAN DID.

"It is the literal truth to say that without the Victory Loan of last year our farmers could have marketed only a portion of our products. The wheels of many of our factories would have become still and our general trade and commerce would have suffered most serious depression."

TORONTO WOMAN GAVE UP ALL HOPE

Mrs. Gorringe Never Expected to be Well Again—Tanlac Restores Her.

"Positively, the day I started taking Tanlac was the turning point in my life, and I wouldn't be without this wonderful medicine for anything," declared Mrs. Ivy Gorringe, of 49 Perth avenue, Toronto, who is employed by Telfer Bros., Ltd., the other day.

"Last winter," she continued, "I underwent a serious operation that was such a severe shock to my nervous system that when I left the hospital I was on the verge of a collapse. My strength was completely gone, by vitality was at a low ebb, and I didn't seem to be able to improve at all. My appetite failed and the little I forced myself to eat did me no good for I fell off till I weighed only ninety pounds and was little more than skin and bones. My skin was so pale and sallow it looked like I had no blood in my veins, and I just can't describe how utterly worn out and rundown I was. I gave up hope of ever getting any better, and was so blue and despondent that I actually didn't care whether I lived or not.

"I never was much of a believer in medicines of any kind, but when one of my friends who worried herself over my condition begged me to try Tanlac I decided to do so just to please her. Well, sir, it did me so much good that before I had finished my first bottle I was feeling like a different person. I have taken six bottles, now and it is really astonishing the way I have improved. I have a splendid appetite and my food is doing me good for I have already gained ten pounds since I started taking Tanlac. I have entirely recovered from that nervous, rundown condition following my operation, and am actually in better shape to-day than I have ever been. I know there are others who are prejudiced as I was about taking medicines, but if they will only give Tanlac a trial I am sure they will be convinced like I was that it is the best nerve tonic in the world."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co., Ltd.; in Havelock by A. C. Denike; in Lakefield by Tanner Drug Co., Ltd.; in Fowler's Corners by W. A. Hunter; in Gelert by A. J. Scott; in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

Barley Chocolate Cake (Loaf).

One cup hot water, stirred in 2 heaping tablespoonfuls of cocoa. Boil two or three minutes, stirring all the time to keep from scorching. One tablespoon, rounding, of shortening, ½ cup sweet milk, 1 egg well beaten, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 heaping teaspoon soda, dissolved in the sweet milk, 1 heaping teaspoon baking powder, 1 teaspoon vanilla, 1 cup granulated sugar. Thicken with entire barley flour, with the baking powder sifted in with it. Make a little more stiff than with wheat flour, loaf and bake in moderate oven about five minutes longer, after you really think it is done. I or my family cannot detect the difference between the wheat or barley flour in this cake. But it will not keep well over two days, as it gets chippy, different than with wheat.

Look within for happiness, as troubles will come without being looked for.

PRECIOUS PLATINUM HAS HISTORY FULL OF ROMANCE

White Metal, Worth Six Times as Much as Gold, Seems to be Plentiful in Columbia—Once Was Thrown Away as Worthless.

The fact that platinum, that beautiful and very expensive metal just now worth about six times as much as gold, was first discovered in South America in a section of what is now the Republic of Colombia, is not exactly a matter of common knowledge. Furthermore, it may not be generally known that the scientists, dentists and manufacturers of the most expensive jewelry in the United States must now depend for their supplies of the precious "white gold" practically entirely upon the Colombian mines, for the Russian sources of supply are for the time being "out of the game."

Still, there's no imminent danger of Colombia's resources in platinum being exhausted. They have been mining it down there for nearly 150 years, but the output seems to be constantly increasing. As an instance, according to the current number of the Bulletin of the Pan-American Union, of Washington, D.C., the exports of the metal the past three years were valued as follows: In 1915 at $607,500, 1916 at $1,350,000 and for the year 1917 at $2,160,100.

Incidentally it is interesting to note that at one time, and that not so very long ago, the crude platinum grains that were mixed in with the ore of certain gold mines in Colombia were regarded as a waste product and thrown away. Dr. George F. Kunz, Tiffany's expert on precious stones and metals, in an article recently contributed to the Bulletin of the Pan-American Union tells of it as follows:

"The rejection of platinum as a waste product in the operation of refining gold led to some strange happenings in Colombia. The platinum separated from the gold by the dry or blowing system was either cast into the street or thrown through cracks in the building where the work was done. Later, when platinum became valuable, a considerable quantity of the metal was thus discovered in Quibdo, capital of the Choco district, where much gold refining was done. As a result the entire town of some 1,500 inhabitants was turned into a mine and the natives were employed in working the streets for the government, while many property owners mined under their houses. In one case a man went so far as to tear down his story, and was rewarded by recovering enough platinum to rebuild on a larger scale and cleared $4,000 in American gold besides."

"THE KAISER'S DREAM."

Here's a story, though strange it may seem,
How the Great Kaiser Bill, had a wonderful dream,
He was dreaming of Allies as he lay on his bed
When the dream twitched about, he found he was dead.

In a very fine coffin, he was lying in state,
And though thousands were there, none mourned over his fate
His soul buzzed around and he found to his cost
That he and his officers were doomed to be lost.

He wouldn't believe and to Heaven went straight,
And on reaching the portals knocked loud at the gate
"Hey! Peter, get busy, quick, open the door
See who is here, The KAISER, make everything roar.

"ell Gott I'm here and e'll have a parade, Beat the drums, blow the horns, have a swell banquet made,"
St. Peter looked out, and with voice loud and clear
Said, "Try below Bill, YOU CANT GET IN HERE!"

"Tut, Tut," said the Kaiser, you're very uncivil, Perhaps I'll be better received by the Devil"
And I'm going with pleasure, and away he did go
A whistling like Hell to make a fine show.

He arrived at the door, and was filled with dismay
As he passed in and heard the devil say,
"Look here boys, take notice, I give warning, I'm expecting the Kaiser down here in the morning."

"But don't let him in, for to me it is clear,
He is after my job, and we want no scabs here.
If once he gets in, he'll go fighting about
So give him the Ha-Ha, and kick him right out."

"Oh Satan dear friend," the Kaiser then cried,
"Excuse me for listening while waiting outside,
But please let me in, for I'm feeling quite cold,
And if you want money, I've plenty of gold."

Let me sit in a corner, no matter how hot,
Oh, no, said the Devil, "most certainly not,
We don't admit folks with riches and pelf,
Here's sulphur and matches, make a hell for yourself."

From this troublesome dream, Bill awoke in a sweat
And said, "that's a dream I'll never forget,
That I wouldn't reach heaven, I know very well,
But I never once thought I'd be kicked out of hell."

FATAL ACCIDENT AT KIRKFIELD

KIRKFIELD, Aug. 13.—A fatal accident occurred here on Saturady when Alex. Vassar, son of Mr. Andrew Vassar, was instantly killed.

The deceased, who was thirty years of age and unmarried, had loaded a water tank which he intended taking to the picnic grounds near the village. When starting on the trip, the horses became frightened and ran away. In turning round a building the tank overturned, crushing the young man's head beneath. Death was instantaneous.

GET IN FOR THE FINISH.

A ball game is not won until the last man is out. The final jump wins the race. The game man and the game horse show their gameness in the final moment.

This war will be won by the gamest side. The Allies have it but it will be in the final quarter.

There is a chance for every man to get in on the finish. Farms of Canada need men and the Allies need the products of Canadian farms. Get out with the harvesters and make sure of the crop.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

Peterboro Flyer Lost His Life While Performing a Very Difficult Feat

Aeroplane Crushed to the Ground With Serious Consequences—Death of Lieut. Harry Hastie.

A letter has been received by Mr. D. Hastie of Lang, from Lieut. Cecil Boyd, R.A.F., a chum of Harry Hastie, who was killed in an aeroplane accident at Shotwick, England. He enlisted at Montreal with the famous Grenadier Guards, and won his commission in the field, and was transferred to the Royal Air Forces, at that time called the Royal Flying Corps. He had just been promoted full lieutenant at the time of his death.

Royal Air Force,
Shotwick, Queen's,
Chester, England,
July 21, 1918.

To Dear Mr. and Mrs. Hastie and Family—

Let me introduce myself before going any further, as one of Harry's nearest friends, and as such—and on behalf also of many others who have asked me to—permit me to extend to you our sincerest sympathy in your bereavement. I enjoyed the pleasure of his friendship at Hendon and again at Shotwick up to the tiem of his demise, and I feel very keenly indeed for those who are left to mourn his loss, knowing as I do what a real good boy he was, and how dear to you, his parents, he must ever be.

A DARING OFFICER.

A keener or more daring officer would be hard to find. He was a credit to his homeland, his race, and to you, his parents. The Air Force and the Empire are so much poorer by his death. The sad and sudden news staggered us all here (where he was very popular) and I, personally, can hardly realize it yet; although it is, unfortunately, all too true.

It appears he was in the act of performing a very touchy feat, viz., "judging distance," by coming down from a height, and then holding the machine off from touching the ground. He was flying a machine noted for its sensitiveness on fore and aft controls (Sopwith Pup) and must have misjudged his close proximity. The wheels made contact with the ground and owing to the high speed attained, wrecked herself, with fatal consequences to her pilot.

THE FUNERAL.

In spite of my requests to do so, I was not permitted to talk to him, although he was quite conscious, or I might have been able to give you some record of his wishes. He so often spoke of home, in the persons of his mother, father and sister, so much at least, that I clearly recollect, that I have no doubt of his sentiments in his last hours. He passed away some four or five hours later.

From what information I have been able to gather, his sufferings, acute as they must have been, were courageously borne and Harry died for his country and the cause that he had espoused, as he had lived—a gallant boy in every sense of the term.

We were able, I am pleased to assure you, to arrange a suitable burial. The coffin, on the face of which a large brass plate was inscribed: Name, Air Force Title, Age and Date of Death, was covered with the Union Jack and several beautiful wreaths; mounted on a military carriage, and followed to the little church at Shotwick by his fellow officers. After the service, six officers acting as pall-bearers, followed by the remainder, and two of his relatives from Sheffield and Uphill, bore the coffin to the graveside, where the guard of honour had by this time assembled. The impressiveness of the occasion was marked and touching. The coffin being lowered and the burial service read, three volleys were fired over the graves, the officers present paying their last respects in the customary fashion by individual salutation around the spot which marks the resting place of the mortal remains of your beloved son.

This poor and painful description of the sad proceedings will serve to give you some idea of the sad event.

A COMMITTEE.

I have been nominated as one of the Committee of Adjustment of his affairs and I shall do all I can to assist in the proper administration of same, especially from the personal standpoint. Settlements of this description are unusually restricted by formalities.

The results will be made to you in due course. Let me assure you that anything and everything which comes to my notice in this connection has my individual attention and regard.

I have said all I feel I can. I too am a mourner and believe me I feel his absence very much. Your great consolation must rest on the fact that Harry died in the execution of his duty. Again sympathizing with you, and committing your beloved son to his Maker, and his God, I am, yours, in deepest sympathy,

CECIL BOYD,
Lieut. R.A.F.

EX-MAYOR WM. BULLER APPOINTED CHAIRMAN

At the regular monthly meeting of the Board of Health held last evening Ex-Mayor William Buller was appointed temporary chairman.

HUNS "LED BY NOSE"! SAYS HERR DELBRUECK.

Amsterdam, August 13. — In the August issue of the Prussian Jahrbuecher, Professor Delbrueck utters another of his periodical gentle complaints that the German people are being sadly misinformed on intrinsic truth about America's participation in the war.

He goes so far as to say that the German people are "being led by the nose and willingly so," by a large section of the press, which is continually hamering on the fallacies that America entered the war to save her investments or to arm against Japan, or merely because "blood is thicker than water."

Professor Delbrueck argues that America and Germany are virtually agreed on one of the most important issues in this war, namely the freedom of seas, as shown by Imperial Chancellor Hertling's acceptance on February 25th of President Wilson's "four principles," enunciated on February 11th.

RUDDER'S KISS ON NOSE OF TORPEDO SAVES STEAMSHIP

Brazilian Vessel Escapes Two U-Boats in Running Fight Off French Coast.

NEW YORK, Aug. 10.—How a torpedo, aimed straight at the stern of their vessel, missed destroying her only because its course was diverted by a "kiss" with the steamship's rudder, was told by seamen on board a Brazilian freight steamship that arrived at an American port from a port in France.

According to the seamen their vessel was attacked twelve days ago when about two hundred miles off the French coast by two large submarines simultaneously. One of the U-boats was about a mile astern, while the other was dead ahead, about the same distance.

The first torepdo came from the forward submarine and missed the Brazilian vessel by a scant seventy-five feet. A well aimed shot from the merchantman caused this submarine to submerge and it was not seen again, although no assertion is made by the Brazilion's crew that a hit was scored on the enemy.

Hardly had this exchange of shots taken place when the observer on the Brazilian's after bridge reported the wake of a torpedo coming straight toward the vessel's stern. The merchantman at once began zig-zagging, but this would not have availed her, as the torpedo reached her before she had completely changed her course.

The freighters' rudder, moving slowly at the phycological moment that the torpedo reached her stren, happened to barely touch the side of the torepdo's nose, causing the deadly missile to swerve just enough to miss the hull of the steamship. Had the rudder not been in exactly the right position at the instant the explosive nose of the torpedo would have struck squarely at the rudder post. As it was, the torpedo glided past the freighter and continued on its way within a dozen feet of the Brazilian's starboard side.

A shot from the freighter's stern gun fell close to the pursuing U-boat, but apparently caused no damage, for this submersible kept up the chase for an hour before finally being lost to view.

Among the crew were several young French boys getting their first taste of the sea as juniors on board merchantmen, and they behave with extraordinary coolness during the running fight with the U-boats.

To Ward Off Summer Complexion Ills

To keep the face smooth, white and beautiful all summer, there's nothing quite so good as ordinary mercolized wax. Discolored or freckled skin, so common at this season, is gently, gradually absorbed by the wax and replaced by the newer, fresher skin beneath. The face exhibits no trace of the wax which is applied at bedtime and washed off mornings. Greasy creams, powders and rouges, on the other hand, are apt to appear more conspicuous than usual these days of extessive perspiration. Just get an ounce of mercolized wax at any drugstore and use it like cold cream. This will help any skin at once and in a week or so the complexion will look remarkably clear, young and healthy.

LEAVES A DOLLAR TO SON IN HER WILL

Peterboro Property is Included in the Estate.

"As my son William John Rombourgh has been provided for I give him the sum of one dollar," reads the third clause in the will of the late Mrs. Isabella Rombough, who died July 19, 1918. The entire value of her estate is $7,945, consisting of $3,245 personality and $4,700 realty. The house at 45 St. James avenue, Toronto, is valued at $3,500, and a house on Hunter street, Peterborough, Ont., at $1,200.

An interest in the estate of the late Henry Stephenson of Jedburgh, Scotland, of $3,000. The entire estate with the exception of the one dollar for the son William is bequeathed "to my daughter Mary Elizabeth Malcolm —subject, however, to the payment to my daughter Margaret A. Lott, of the sum of $50 annually."

THE FATTENING OF POULTRY

The profits obtained from marketing lean, poorly fleshed, unfinished chickens are so small as to be frequently discouraging. Many of the packing houses and larger produce dealers find it necessary to go to considerable expense to provide the necessary premises and equipment to properly finish such poultry. The best place to feed poultry is on the farm, and, if it pays the packing houses to take the trouble, it obviously would be good business to do the work on the farm.

Proper feeding and finishing will not only greatly increase the weight of the birds, but will also enhance the value of every ounce of flesh on the carcass, and greatly reduce the proportion of offal in relation to the amount of edible meat.

There is generally a difference of from three to seven cents per pound in the price paid for well-fleshed birds as compared with lean unfinished stock, just off the range.

Prime Quality.

There is always a market for prime quality poultry, while the poorer quality has to be sold at whatever price can be obtained, depending on the market and the amount of effort put forth on the part of the seller.

Birds generally make the greatest gain when about three to four months of age, and the average birds make the most economical gains during the first two weeks of special feeding.

Chickens can be readily taught to feed by lamplight; this is a great convenience, as it is desirable that the time of feeding be spaced as nearly as possible twelve hours apart.

The crate system of feeding is much more economical and efficient. In practising this method, one is able to carefully note the progress being made by each bird and the feeding period of the more thrifty can often be shortened or lengthened as desired. Also the flesh of the crate-fed birds is invariably softer than that of pen-fed birds.

ATTENDANCE WAS NOT LARGE AT CANNING EXHIBIT

Owing to the excessive heat, the attendance at the canning demonstration given yesterday at the T.A.S. Hall, by Miss Muriel Foote, government expert of the Department of Agriculture, was not large. Those who attended however were well repaid for turning out as Miss Foote conveyed some splendid hints on the canning of beets, corn and tomatoes. One idea not generally known in canning beets is the fact that 1 tablespoon of vinegar added to the salt and water used in each sealer helps to preserve the colour.

PAT DONOHUE'S PICKAXE.

PARIS, Aug. 8.— Pat Donohue, an American soldier, who was recently captured at Bouresches, escaped after being a few days in the hands of the Germans. He was taken before the German intelligence bureau, and was questioned, says the New York Herald (Paris edition.)

"They asked me how many troops there were in the Belleau Wood region," said Donohue, "and I replied, 'There are forty-two American divisions and thirty French divisions. In the whole of France there are ten million Americans, but probably I have forgotten some, being a bad counter.'

"For this answer they kicked me badly and set me to work cutting brushwood for camouflage purposes. Finding a pickaxe a good instrument for any kind of dirty work, I killed a sentry and escaped with two comrades. It took us five days to travel eight miles before we reached the American posts."—Central News.

Advance of the Grey Green Line

THE KEEP.

(By Capt. R. W. Rees.)

Probably he looked younger than he really was. The solitary star on his shoulder strap had lost none of its pristine lustre. His Sam Browne was yellow with the yellowness of the latest Gazette. But they had given him thirty men and a Lewis gun, and orders to hang on at all costs.

His charge was a Keep—one of those strong points in the line which must be held till the last man drops, so that your attacking enemy, if he has won the initial advantage, may be checked while the men behind prepare for prolonged resistance and counter-attack.

The Boche had launched his main attack at dawn, and it was now nine o'clock. For four hours his drum fire had beaten on the British line, smashing firebays into nothingness, tracing grim mosaics of mud and blood on a front that was less country-side than thinly linked shell-holes. He had mixed gas and high explosive, he had sent over his "rum-jars" in sufficient profusion to throw the seismographs of the world out of gear; he had filled the air with whizz-bangs and aerial torpedoes and all his vile machines of war. And now he was coming over himself.

Dim in the distance, showing faintly through the haze that might have been morning mist or the accumulated vapour of bursting shells, came the gray-green line. Someone who mattered had decreed that the main resistance should be made on the line of close support, and the front line companies had withdrawn to take up the new position. The Keep had come into its own. No matter what happened, no matter what force the Boche hurled against them, that youngster and his handful of men had to keep the enemy back while one man was left to work the Lewis gun or to throw a bomb.

In the bloodiest of hand to hand fighting there is an excitement which makes the game not an unpleasant one to play. The individual issue is in sufficient doubt—each man has his chance. But in a Keep the issue is never for a moment in doubt. In the end it must be overwhelmed. If, before that happens, it can hold up the enemy's advance for even a quarter of an hour it has done its job well. After that it is oblivion—with the bare chance of waking to consciousness in German hands.

The subaltern looked out at the advancing host, and thanked God that he could depend upon every one of his men. His Sergeant, a stiff-souled old fellow who has been a bosun in the Merchant Service before he took to soldiering — was strolling around as unconcerned as though on parade, seeing that every man was in his appointed place. Just on his right a Lance Corporal was playing merrily on the oncoming Boche with his machine gun, and joking with his number two as he fired.

The subaltern himself had been a little scared earlier on—not actually frightened, but momentarily prone to think of the people at home, and the many full years that he had not lived. But now all that had gone. He found himself merely wondering whether that big Boche he could see in front of all the others would collect a bullet before he got to the trench.

"They've spotted us, sir," said the sergeant, at his elbow.

He had seen that himself. A platoon of the enemy was working to each flank. A rifle-grenadier was getting to work on the Lewis gun. The subaltern ordered the gun's position to be changed. Its last shot, before it was dismounted, got the big German he was watching in the stomach, and he smiled grimly as the fellow curled up. That was one, at any rate, who would not get to the Keep.

"Gun correct," reported Number One from the new position. The subaltern gave the order to fire. A sudden thought struck him, queerly.

"Sergeant," he said, "did you send off that return of Mills Bombs to H.Q.?"

The sergeant did not answer. He was lying huddled up on a firestep. The subaltern stood up beside his body and drew his revolver. He wondered if B Company was in position behind him yet.

The grey-green line swept over the remains of the last wire entanglement.

Little Girl Struck By Auto After Had Got Off Street Car

Signalledi to proceed by traffic officer P. C. Bromley, F. P. Pocock, 149 Pearl street, Brockville, turned west from George street into Charlotte street and struck Jessie May, aged 9 years, as she stepped from the C. G. E. car. P. C. Bromley reported that he noticed the street car approaching, but thought Pocock would have time to get by. Several minutes elapsed before the car arrived. As Pocock approached it the passengers began to get off. He kept on driving and his car hit the little girl ,knocking her down and running over her.

Dr. Edward Wood was called and stated that the child was injured internally. She was removed to St. Joseph's hospital in Comstock's ambulance. Pocock turned his car toward the sidewalk to avoid striking the girl but she ran in the same direction and was knocked down in the gutter.

$118.20 Fine on Old Man for Indecent Assault of Two Girls

A fine of $118.20 was imposed by Magistrate Dumble this morning on an old man who appeared before him on a charge of indecent assault of two little girls of about fourteen years. Mr. Wearing, his solicitor, suggested that the fine of $50 in one case should be a sufficient corrective, bpt the Magistrate refused to listen to it, and added another $50 and costs.

WARNING TO DEFAULTERS UNDER THE M.S.A.

It is hoped that all outstanding absentees and defaulters in Military District No. 3 will take advantage of the opportunity given them to escape punishment by reporting for duty not later than the 24th instant. This chance is afforded them by the Governor General's Proclamation of August 1st. Those who report for duty up to the 24th August will be free from punishment; and such of them as are entitled to it will be given harvest or other leave.

All who are affected by this Proclamation should realize the seriousness of their position. The Military authorities intend to deal rigorously with offenders and to allow no one failing to report by 24th instant to escape punishment.

Absentees and deserters failing to report during the period of amnesty must understand that they have no clemency to hope for. Instructions have already been received at District Headquarters to try by Court-Martial and inflict severe penalties upon all outstanding absentees and deserters apprehended after the 24th August, 1918.

Treaties Enabling Canada To Draft Aliens Expected To Be Concluded Shortly

Ottawa, Aug. 7.—Negotiations are in progress with the various allied nations for the signing of treaties such as Canada has completed with the United States for the reciprocal drafting of citizens. Canada has led the way in such negotiations and the first treaty signed has been that with the Republic whereby American citizens in Canada must enlist or register for service in the American army within sixty days. After that date they are liable to compulsory service in Canada and will only be entitled to exemption or discharge from service according to the laws of Canada. The same holds good as to Canadian subjects living in the United States.

It is hoped at Ottawa that this will be the first of a series of treaties which are being negotiated through the British Foreign Office, and it is expected that France, Belgium, Italy, Serbia and Greece will all be included and that similar arrangements to those of the United States can be concluded.

In the meantime it is pointed out that Canada must respect international law and to report to intern or to draft citizens of allied nations would be contrary to such laws. If she acted otherwise Canada would be placed in serious position with the allied powers. It is understood that the allied powers. It is understood that the Greek Ambassador at Washington has already made representations to Ottawa in regard to the Toronto riots and is making an investigation It is possible that Canada may have to apologize.

It is pointed out that there are three kinds of aliens: (1) Enemey aliens, subjects of Germany, Austria, Turkey or Bulgaria.

(2) Aliens from allied nations at war with the Central Powers.

(3) Aliens from neutral countries.

The most dangerous of the enemy aliens have been interned since the outbreak of the war. The Government has taken the stand that many of the enemy aliens, particularly the Slavic races from Austria, such as Czechs, Galicions, etc., are in sympathy with the Allied cause. In view of the labor shortage, as long as they behaved themselves it was felt they could be allowed to continue as citizens of the country. The difficulty of interning them is enormous, and the wisdom of such a course doubtful. The Galicians alone, probably number a quarter of a million people in Western Canada. If they were interned, these men would have to be fed. As for German citizens, there are now few at large in the country, as it has been generally found that they could not be trusted. It is possible, though, there may be some tightening up of regulations in regard to alien enemies.

As for the next class, as already explained they come under international law and until treaties are signed the Government's hands are tied. It is admitted at the capital that it is a hardship to see young Canadians giving up work and business while aliens are allowed to continue unmolested but it is explained that until treaties are negotiated such as with the United States nothing can be done.

The same is true of aliens from neutral nations. They are also subject to international law and Canada could not interfere with their rights without offending the neutral nations of which they are citizens.

Enemy Resistance is Becoming More Obstinate

There Has Been a Notable Increase in Enemy Shelling During the Last 24 Hours—Minor Attacks Repulsed by the Allied Troops.

(United Press Despatch.)

(By William Philip Simms.)

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN FRANCE, August 14.—Resistance of the German second and eighteenth armies is daily becoming more obstinate.

During the last twenty-four hours there has been a notable increase in enemy shelling, especially gas shells, north of Morlancourt, about Dernancourt, (a mile and a half north of Morlancourt), and in the Valley of the Ancre.

MINOR ATTACKS.

Allied troops north of the Somme repulsed minor attacks, advancing slightly near Bray (where the Americans and British have penetrated the outskirts of the town.)

Rupprecht's gunners are considerably busier on the forward areas. South of Villers-Bretonneux-Chalnes Railway, the Germans are turning their high velocity pieces on places like Caix (two miles west of Rocieres), where large dumps of their own ammunition were left behind. At Caix a long train loaded with high explosives was abandoned on a siding. To-day they were attempting to blow up the train with shell fire.

Allied airmen continue to swarm the sky, harassing the enemy transporto.

CHINAMEN SMOKED OPIUM

Charlotte street store was used for smoking opium.

The last witness for the prosecution was a local man, who sixteen years ago was addicted to the use of opium. He tasted of the dark, viscid contents of the jar taken in the raid, and pronounced it opium.

SMOKING FOR A CURE.

Yee York in his defense, stated, through a Chinese interpreter of the Toronto police court, that he had the opium habit ten years ago. He smokes occasionally now when necessary, that is when a sickness returns to him. Periodical attack of asthma he found were overcome by smoking a pill or two of opium.

Mr. O'Brien pointed out that the law recognizes such exceptions, as reasonable and excusable.

Chinese Case.

Jim Hum, proprietor of the Dominion Cafe, said he knew York. "He keeps a tea store and grocery of Chinese goods. I don't smoke opium. The defendant suffers from asthma. I have heard that opium smoking cures the disease. The defendant told me he had the disease and had to "hit the pipe" for it. I never knew they smoked in York's store. I knew he smoked opium, but I never saw him smoking it.

Harold Littledale Now in France

Former Member of Examiner Staff Heard From.

The appended letter addressed to Mr. R. R. Hall of this city, refers to Harold Littledale, a former member of the Examiner reportorial staff, who recently was awarded the Pulitzer prize of one thousand dollars for the best piece of reportorial work during the past year:

France, July 10, 1918.

Dear Mr. Hall:

Your letter of the 10th ult., was forwarded to me out here and leaves me with a feeling of regret at my inability to meet you in New York. I remember the article on binder twine, although it is, as you say, quite a number of years ago. I don't know how that recent little journalistic affair came to get such a wide publicity but I have been receiving letters and kind wishes from old friends, so it was worth while for that reason alone.

At the present moment I am hoping for leave—two leaves, in fact—one to Paris and one to New York or England, but after 16 months out here leaves cannot come too often to be tiresome. My address is Gn. H. A. Littledale, 302227, 2 Section, A Coy., 5th Tank Batt., B.E.F.

If I get back to New York after this show is over I'll be glad to see you any time you are there.

Yours very truly,
H. A. Littledale.

Will Get After the Foreigners

OTTAWA, Aug. 14.—That privileged character, the Allied foreigner of military age who resides and earns his money in Canada, is likely to be brought into the drag net of military service shortly. As it now stands, if he fails to respond to the call to arms from his own country, he is a deserter and may be shot if he goes home, but he is here safe so long as he remains here. Negotiations are now in progress with French, Belgian, Italian and other Allied governments to make these men amendable to the Military Service Act of Canada.

IT ISN'T OVERWORK.

WORRY AND BAD HABITS HARM HEALTH MORE THAN STRENUOUS EFFORT.

A doctor of very wide experience has noted this phenomenon; every day men come to him, broken down in health; and almost invariably they inform him that the cause is "overwork."

Yet, on further questioning, this doctor finds that virtually none of his patients work as hard as he does. Yet he is well and they are sick; he is strong and able to do his work without exhaustion, and they can do little or no work any more.

This is his deduction: that their breakdown was not due to work, but to a terrible load of psychological and physiological habits they had been carrying—a load so great that a very little work in addition overtaxed their waning strength.

What are these habits? They vary with the individual, and their aspects are innumerable.

Work—just plain, wholesome hard work, either physical or mental—hurts very little. It hurts healthy people—people who are healthy in mind and body—not at all.

What many people call "overwork" is fretting over their work—worry.

What many other people call "overwork' is loading their system with poison by overeating.

What still others call "overwork," is the habit of taking stimulants to brace them up to their work.

"Nervousness"—the vague, all-embracing ailment that brings people to the doctors complaining that they are run down or broken down fro moverwork—is the logical product of the bad habits embraced by these classifications.

Work—overwork gets blamed for it all, when it is at fault for scarcely any of it.

People who keep their minds clear and cool, who take things philosopically as they come; who discipline their wills to look on the cheerful side of things; who eat what they need, proportioned to their physical activity; who take stimulants not at all or, if they ever do, never take them to whip their flagging strength—such people can do a prodigious amount of work and never dream of such a thing as "overwork."

Healthy people—people who live healthy lives and keep healthy minds and order their lives inexorably under the rule of a calm spirit, a spirit that keeps superior to petty annoyances and refuses to become the slave of numbing, paralyzing, corrupting fears and worries—do not know what "overwork" means. They can keep on till they are too tired to go further, and then after a night's sleep be up and ready for another day's eager and willing toil.

There is such a thing as working too much, but its penalty is weariness that forces cessation of labor and achievement of rest. It seldom or never causes "breakdowns," though worry and intemperance in food or drink causes thousands of them, most of which are falsely charged to "overwork."

And in nine cases out of ten, the amount of work that to the worrier and the glutton spells "overwork" is but play to the healthy individual.

Before you talk about "overwork" study your living habits.—Duluth Herald.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

The De Laval Put Thistles Back Another Notch in Game Yesterday Afternoon

Score Was 6-5 in Favour of the Dairymen—Both Teams Had a Comedy of Errors—Standing of the Bush Leaguers.

MIXING 'EM UP.

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Riversides	7	1	.875
Thistles	5	3	.625
De Laval	4	4	.500
Orientals	2	5	.286
Matthews	1	6	.129

De Laval trod all over Louie Yeotes' pennant-chasing Thistles at the ball lot last evening and defeated them by a score of 6 to 5. It wasn't a mistake; it was just another sample of the things they do in the Twilight League. Nobody's a winner till the last man is out.

Thistles were travelling along with a fairly good lead of two runs until the sixth was encountered. After two were down, two hits and an error gave De Laval two runs and tied the count. Thistles shot ahead in the seventh, due largely to Cherrett's lively work with the bat and on the bags. But that was the last time the Yeotesmen reached home until the ninth. De Laval came strong in the eighth and with a comedy of hits, wild pegs and boots scored three runs. That was enough to win the game. In the next two innings for Thistles, Frost struck out seven batters, but in the ninth a base on balls and Benny Taylor's inability to hold the third strike on Murphy, coupled with his throw to first and the return of the ball to the plate, allowed Cherrett to score. Murphy got to third and any old kind of a hit would have tied the score. Luck, however, was kind to De Laval for once, and both Neary and Shaw fanned.

Sharpe's Circus Catch.

The game produced the best running catch of the Twilight season. Sharpe was playing deep centre when Bartley sent up a high one over short and towards second. Lipsett backed up after the ball. At the same time Sharpe came running in at full speed. Lipsett stumbled and fell in his path but he came right on and grabbed the ball with one hand, close to the shortfielder's position.

Murphy also did some fielding, his doubling of McDonald in the ninth being a smart piece of work. He took Frost's fly and threw out McDonald, who had ventured far from the first corner.

Thistles used Paddy Gorman on the firing line, Neary going to first base and Mahood to right field. Paddy pitched well enough but he was not as effective as Frost who hurled for De Laval. The Separator flinger fanned thirteen and held Thistles to five hits.

First Innings.

Jackson threw out Dugan, Sharpe was safe on Cherrett's bad throw to Neary, but was forced at second by Taylor. McDonald walked and Frost fouled to the catcher.

Cherrett flew to Dugan. Murphy walked and stole second. Neary went out on a liner to first, Murphy taking third and scoring when Frost made a wild pitch on the third strike to Shaw. Shaw navigated the paths and came home on Jackson's single to centre and Sharpe's bad throw to third to get him. With Cupoli batting, Jackson was pegged out by Taylor, going into third.

Second Innings.

Lipsett was passed and stole second. Nellist flied to Cherrett. On Fitzgerald's tap Cherrett and Jackson got Lipsett at third. Jackson stopped Legon after a nice stop and throw.

Thistles went out in a row, Dugan tagging Cupoli, Bartley on a fly to Sharpe and Mahood fanning.

Third Innings.

Dugan fanned, Sharp got a hit past first and stole. There he stayed, as Taylor flied to Shaw and Bartley threw out McDonald.

Gorman grounded out. Cherrett dumped a hit in front of the plate for the bag and stole second. He also stole third and beat the throw to the plate on Murphy's bingle. Neary grounded out and Shaw fanned.

Fourth Innings.

Frost walked and Lipsett singled to left. After the throw in, Neary pegged out Frost at third, the De Laval pitcher being slow. Nellist flied to Jackson. Fitzgerald's single drove in Lipsett. Legon walked and with two on and De Laval rooters looking for a score, Bartley threw out Dugan.

Jackson retired via Frost and McDonald, Cupoli was passed and Bartley got on when Lipsett booted his grounder. Mahood flied to Lipsett and Gorman fanned.

Fifth Innings.

Sharpe flew to Bartley, Jackson and Bartley threw out the next two.

De Laval played real baseball in this half and held Thistles from scoring in spite of the fact that Cherrett was on third with none out. They failed to rattle Frost. Cherrett drew a walk and stole. Murphy singled to right, Cherrett taking third. Neary fanned and when Shaw hit to Frost, the pitcher got Cherrett going into the plate. With Murphy at third and Shaw far off second, Lipsett threw out Jackson, retiring the side.

Sixth Innings.

De Laval tied the score after two were gone. Frost and Lipsett were retained at first on grounders to Bartley and Gorman. Nellist singled to left and Fitzgerald got the bag when Bartley booted his roller. Legon hit hard to left, scoring Nellist and Fitzgerald scored on Dugan's waft to centre. On the return, Murphy got Legon at the plate.

Thistles failed to do anything in their half. Dugan's wobble allowed Bartley the bag but he played solitaire.

Seventh Innings.

De Laval were retired in order.

Cherrett put his team ahead. He hit out to Legon and got two bases as "Red" lost the ball in the hay. He scored on Murphy's out at first and McDonald's poor throw to the plate. Neary singled and stole but was left stranded at third.

Eighth Innings.

It was a big eighth for De Laval. Frost was an easy out, but Lipsett hit down third, giving Jackson a hard ball to handle. Nellist bounced a single off Gorman's shins. Fitzgerald grounded to Barley, but Neary dropped the peg. He threw badly to third to get Lipsett and the runner scored. Dugan hit to second scoring Nellist, and when Cherrett failed to handle Sharpe's drive, Fitzgerald went home. Shaw ended it by grabbing a long fly from Taylor.

The crowd yelled as Cupoli grounded out and Bartley and Mahood fanned.

Ninth Innings.

McDonald hit to right, but was doubled off first when Murphy took Frost's fly and made a perfect throw to the bag. The pitcher threw out Lipsett.

The fans were on their toes when Thistles came in for their last chance. They had the big end of the batting order after Gorman had fanned.

Sharpe's Circus Catch Was a Feature of the Game.

Cherrett drew a walk. He stole second and third and scored when, after Murphy had fanned, Taylor dropped the ball and had to retire the runner at the bag. The ball went through McDonald. Murphy stole second and made third. Neary missed three, and with the moonbeams illuminating his bronzed and weather beaten physiog, Bill Shaw also ingloriously fanned, and De Laval had the game.

SPORTING COMMENT

No stampede of baseball players to shipyards of steel mills followed Secretary Baker's dictum that September 1 be the time limit of the extension of exemption from the work or fight requirement. The attitude of those who hastened to seek other employment—bar enlisting—was unjustified unless such course was imperative, and if it was it was suddenly so. Loyalty to the game and to the employers demanded that players stick until the season closed. Most of the players have shown this loyalty, and probably those who haven't could have survived any idle time which came their way between the end of the season and finding other employment.

The welfare of the game is the players' welfare. It is their chief consideration except their country's welfar. The game would survive anything he might do but it is to his interest to do all he can to have it in the best possible shape for resumption when the time comes for resuming. Even if nit, the square and loyal thing, inasmuch as the government has said he can stick until September 1, is to stick. Any other course, unless, as said, entering the service, would be selfish and short sighted. A majority of the players so far have been level headed in this matter.

Add Ban Johnson banalitiies, or words of wisdom; whichever you prefer:—"This is no time to force recreation on the public." Not much will be forced that the public doesn't want.

A young Western writer has this gorgeous vision:—"Think of seeing a world's series between the teams of London, champions of England; Paris, champians of France, and Chicago, champions of America! Some world's series, we'd say, and worth going to London or Paris to witness, if necessary." Likely as not it will be among the teams of Manchester, Lyons and Pittsburg.

They say a yellow golf ball is easier to hit than a white. With a rifle, maybe, not with a golf club. There is no such thing as a golf ball being easier to hit—less hard, perhaps, but not easier. It will be a question of size, not color, when golf balls are easier to hit.

Two brothers playing first base in major circles at the same time is a rarity, if not unprecedented. Yet there were the Johnston brothers, Jimmy for the Brooklyns and Doc for the Clevelands. The Pirates had Doc Johnston once, and he is one of those players considering whom you always wonder why they ever are sent back to the minors. There is in baseball what might be described as a back and forth class, including Johnston, Mollwitz, Good, Compton, Bronkie, Gilhooley and various others who have been shuttled between major and minor activity, emphasizing that often the line of demarcation between the two classes is so finely drawn as to be invisible.

The Dempsey-Fulton fight did not end in a knockout. It had no end. It was too short. It didn't last long enough to have more than a beginning.

Next year in baseball is on the knees of the gods, but as to continuing with players above or below the draft age, so lon gas the government is willing, there is this much to be said:—Half a loaf is better than none. There'll always be some fans who want to see a game.

There is small disposition on the part of anybody to bring Dempsey and the Kansas farmer together until the war is over, and by that time the chances are that there will be less. The member from Lawrence is getting along in years and has been too passive as a ringster to keep up interest in his end of it. Dempsey seems on the road to the championship either by conquest or by default. He is the biggest figure in pugilism right now. The chances are that he will be popular in that capacity, the most popular idol since Corbett. He has affability, personality and punch. So far there has been no occasion to add head expansion to his other measurements.

Walter Mace, who has been helping John Mack train Yale athletes for many years, and who as first lieutenant in the Aviation Saniary Corps baseball coach. He knows baseball thoroughly and can coach as well as train. He did splendid work with the Blue last spring. He knows football, too, and pretty much the whole gamut of sports. Many friends wish him all success in his more important position and a position commensurate with his ability after the war.

Ray Keating and Jack Northrup are two former spitball pitchers who got along admirably in the American Association before that organization hastily and prematurely closed its season. They got along admirably without the spitball. Both are in the big leagues for the remainder of the season, with too much sense, it is to be hoped, ever again to make use of that particular method of pitching. The sanitary, clean and fair way of pitching which they experienced this year must have made its impression on anybody of sense and descrimination, and in a sense going forward to leagues where the spitball is still allowed is a step backward.

The soldiers of France would enjoy hugely seeing two big league teams swat the ball and they also would derive much beneficial entertainment from seeing them swat the Hunt.

Going back to the time of Doggy Trenchard, there are six Princeton ends who seem to me to sand out as better than any others Nassau has had in that time. Thye are Trenchard Davis, Arthur Poe, Henry, Palmer and Garrett Cochran. The death of Cochran in France removes one who combined speed, power, indomitable spirit and football sense to a rare degree. First he was a full back at Princeton, then an end, and he was end on Bill Church's famous team of '96, the best eleven, to my mind, Princeton ever had, a whirlwind of organized offence. Cochran, John Poe, Bluethenthal, Hogan, Shevlin, Stillman, Brown, Burr and Snow— the grim reaper has exacted a heavy toll from herois figures of the gridiron.

Heathcote, the youngster who is doing so well with the Cardinals, is the second Penn State alumnus to make his mark in major baseball. Birdie Cree was the other.

LOOKS LIKE A BLUFF.

Lewis' Drawing Away From Johnston Only a Stall.

The refusal of Champion Ted Lewis to engage George Engel as his new manager has lost him the chance of ever meeting Champion Benny Leonard. Lewis practically agreed to have Engel be his manager after he had broken away from Jimmy Johnston. Lewis, however, has since failed to keep appointments with Engel for the purpose of coming to terms. Engel and Billy Gibson, manager of Leonard, now are of the opinion that Lewis' so-called breaking away from Johnston was nothing more than a bluff to get on a bout with Leonard and after it was over have Johnston to look after his interests again.

POLICE TO STOP BOXING

Trouble Brewing For the Promoters of Big Salvation Army Sports Carnival.

CHICAGO, August 9.—Police orders to stop boxing at the athletic and military carnival on Saturday at White Sox park for the benefit of the Salvation Army overseas war fund were considered by the committee in charge.

Acting Chief of Police Alcock gave notice that the boxing features of the carnival would not be permitted, and later issued an order to the captain of the district in which the show will be held not to permit boxing under penalty of suspension and facing charges before the Police Trial Board. Special attractions in the way of boxing were planned by the carnival committee. Jesse Willard, champion heavyweight, was to appear against some opponent to be selected. Jack Dempsey had agreed to box Andre Anderson, and a number of other prominent boxers were listed to appear. The chairman of the Promotion Committee said Secretary of War Baker might be asked to place the park within a war zone.

Storage Warehouse to Be Built on Brooklyn's Ball Park.

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—Ebbets Field, home of the Brooklyn Nationals, will be closed for the duration of the war after the game with Philadelphia next Wednesday, and converted into a storage warehouse. This action was decided upon at a meeting of the Board of Directors of the club. Immediately after the final home game of the curtailed season on Aug. 14, special structures will be erected upon certain portions of the field, and these in conjunction with space in and under the grandstands utilized for storage purposes. The former Federal League Park, Brooklyn, is being used for similar purposes at present.

The action of the Brooklyn Club directors is taken to indicate that the officers of the organization do not contemplate a continuation of big league baseball in 1919.

TRAIN STRUCK THRESHING OUTFIT.

An unusual accident with serious results occurred at the level crossing just east and north of Cannington on Friday evening last, when a threshing machine was struck by the 6.00 p.m. passenger train from Midland. The outfit, which belonged to Mr. Edward Lillicrop, was being moved from one farm to another and was crossing the track when the train approached. The engine was safely across the track and the tank was on the other side of the track, but the mill was fairly on the track. The train piled into the mill, splitting it into halves, leaving only the two front wheels with the engine. One half was carried down the track a distance and rolled into the ditch. Fortunately, no one one was injured, but the accident will mean considerable loss to the owner of the outfit.

Deserts Because No Uniform in All Army Will Fit Him

Private Lewis Says Camp Kitchen Was Only Thing Big Enough to Cover Him Comfortably.

YONKERS, N.Y., Aug. 8. —Among the unpraised heroes who never had a chance may be numbered Private William Lewis, of this city, one of the largest and certainly the most indignant deserters in American army annals, who was arrested here. He is ready to fight on certain conditions, and one of these is that he be thrust into a uniform which at least has the appearance of making some effort to go around him.

Lewis, who is twenty-nine years old, deserted from the headquarters company of the Seventh infantry at Camp Greene, N.C. The reason of his desertion is largely sartorial, and when he showed the Judge of Special Sessions a picture of himself in uniform today there was no disposition on the part of the Judge to chide him or make his punishment more bitter. He was taken by military representatives to Fort Slocum.

It appears from the loud evidence of Lewis that when he was drafted he was as full of fight as ever a private need be. He cheered all the way on the trip to Camp Greene, waved out of the car window at all stations and remarked to associate privates, "This is the life!"

But when he arrived at Camp Greene with his vast build and great height the Quartermaster's Department was searched in vain for a uniform that would fit him. None was found, he declared in court yesterday, even after appeals were made to other camps, and as a result the Quartermaster's Department gave him what might be termed the best uniform available. It fitted him like the notorious uniform of Chunga Din, being nothing much before and less than than that behind, and his first stroll about Camp Greene brought forth a roar of laughter such as he hopes never again to cause.

After two days Private Lewis, having caused consternation and riotous mirth in the ranks every time he appeared, was assigned to kitchen duty. The kitchen just fitted him, but every time he placed his head out of the window somebody started laughing at the memory of his scant military tailoring and his indignation grew. No more commodious suit seemed to be forthcoming and Private Lewis, having reached the conclusion that he had cooked food enough for twenty wars, left Camp Greene without so much as a farewell wave.

"I'm willing to fight," he said yesterday, "but the Kaiser ain't likely to come into the kitchen to pick one with me."

RECLUSE STARVES FROM MELANCHOLY AMID HER WEALTH

NEW YORK, Aug. 8.—Mrs. Annie Sisler died here from starvation in her rooms at No. 262 Jackson Avenue, Jersey City, N.J., with wealth estimated at more than $100,000 almost within reach of her arm. She was sixty years of age and was a recluse.

Neighbours, who regarded Mrs. Sisler as eccentric, became alarmed when they heard nothing of her for many days, and told the police. Policeman Frederick Seeber forced an entrance to the modest little apartment. Mrs. Sisler was in bed. She was too weak to utter a word. Dr. Boody was summoned, but she died before he arrived. He reported the woman had starved to death.

In the search of the rooms the police found bank books, bonds and mortgages. In June she had deposited $5,000 in one bank. More than one hundred bonds and mortgages, all good securities, were found tucked in strong boxes. They bore evidence of much handling. Estimate of her possessions placed Mrs. Sisler's wealth at $100,000 as a modest figure. Her rooms were furnished poorly.

With Mrs. Sisler's dealth is recalled the tragedy of her life. She was happy and contented twelve years ago, when one morning her husband, Dr. John H. Sisler, left his drug store, at Ocean and Grand Avenues, saying he was going to call on a patient. He took with him $300. She never saw him again. To her friends she confided she had never received word from him.

Never Recovered.

Mrs. Sisler never recovered from that blow. Her associates said she was broken hearted. Yet her indomitable pride forced her for a time to hold her head high. Then it seemed her spirit was broken. She left her home and went to Jackson Avenue, which was to her like a retreat. She shut herself in from the world and none knew her thereafter.

Dr. Sisler owned several parcels of property. He had invested well, and they increased in value. Mrs. Sisler sold most of the property, retaining mortgages. She lived alone, speaking to none of her neighbours and going out only to attend to financial affairs and obtain food.

No article of food was found in the apartment. There was nothing to show whether the woman had become ill and unable to obtain supplies for herself or had wilfully starved herself. She never was suspected of being a miser. Those who knew her story said she did not live her strange, lonely life to hoard money, but rather because she had learned to hate the world.

French Bring Support Over a Difficult Road, But Make Headway—Nests of Quick Firers Discovered—Four Days of Heavy Fighting.

TRENCHES CONSTRUCTED IN 1914

WITH THE FRENCH ARMY IN FRANCE, Aug. 15.—The battle of the Thiescourt area is only a small part of the operation in progress, and developments in other parts of the line may modify the situation before the battle is reopened here.

The Germans have had one advantage here as elsewhere in that they have been falling back on prepared positions while the French have been obliged to bring support over a difficult road.

So General Humbert's troops have had four days of constant fighting, fully half of which has been spent in gas infested sectors. During this fighting it was the machine gun against the rifle, the Germans having comparatively few infantry men in the front line, but being plentifully supplied with machine guns—virtually one for each man and ambushed.

When the nests of quick-firers were discovered and a move against them begun, this move had to be in the nature of an outflanking process which was trying work in this rough region.

Besides holding the two important crests of St. Claude Farm and Ecouvillon the French are within 100 yards of Monolithe, on the high plateau which commands a considerable extent of ground to the north and east. From Ecouvillon, the French have a good view of the Divette valley, where the Germans appear to be trying to establish a position with the aid of their old earthworks, which were constructed in 1914.

MORE WOMEN THAN MEN

Italian Scientist Shows Numerical Difference Between Sexes.

LONDON, Aug. 15.—An Italian scientist, in a book just published on the subject of war and population, says that there will be in England 121 women between the ages of 20 and 44 to every 100 men between the same ages if the war ends next year. In 1910 the proportion was 108 to 100.

In France there will be 124 women of those ages, the writer estimates, to every 100 men. In Germany, wereh the sexes were almost evenly balanced before the war,, tre proportion will be 119 women to 100 men.

Eugenically in all the fighting countries the war will cause an improvement, the scientist beileves, because every man in taking a wife will have a larger selection of women to choose from, and therefore he will be likely to choose the healthiest and strongest.

The Woman Who Changed

By JANE PHELPS

A CLOUDLESS SKY

CHAPTER CXLIV.

It seemed that I was almost too happy. To have mother with me—to have George, so kind, so loving—was all I could possibly desire. I was so glad, too, to have mother see how good George was to me. I had always believed that Philip had told her I was unhappy. He had seen us when we were so many times at cross purposes and I had foolishly allowed him to see that I was miserable. But now I sang and laughed and was gay all day long. No one COULD think me anything but happy now!

I had so much to tell mother. All about the Babcocks, and their visit. I wished she could know them. She smiled when I said so and replied:

"Stranger things have happened than that, at some time, we might meet. But I am glad for you to have such friends. Even if they are older. From what you tell me, they are still young enough to be interesting, while old enough to be of real service to you in teaching you many things you need to know. You are very fortunate, my daughter, in many ways. You must be grateful."

"I am, mother. At least I am now."

"We must all learn, dear. Experience is the only teacher by whose lessons we profit. Someway, we all must know things for ourselves. There is always something in the experience of others that doesn't just fit."

AN UNCOMFORTABLE NIGHT.

We had talked late, mother and I. George was out and would not come in until after midnight—so he had said. But it was nearly twelve when we went to bed and he was still out. I dropped off to sleep almost immediately. I partly wakened, and thought I must have the nightmare, I had been dreaming that I heard voices, shouting. I lay struggling to waken myself more thoroughly, then suddenly realized that I had not been dreaming at all. That I really HAD heard voices—that people were outside calling, and yes—they were screaming!

I sprang to the window. It was bright moonlight. I could see the street, and just then the clanging of the fire wagons brought a sudden realization of what it all meant. The house must be on fire!

I dashed on my clothes, and felt along the hall to mother's room, she was already awake.

"Hurry!" I gasped, then ran up another flight to the servants' quarters. I rapped on each door, calling loudly all the time. I had heard mother calling me to come back, that she would waken them but I paid no heed.

When I ran back down the stairs, mother was waiting, and the firemen were already in the house. There had been scarcely any disorder, the fire was quickly under control. James had rushed down staire and was watching that no one got in to steal, acting under the direction of the chief.

"You can go back to bed," the chief had just said, when the door flew open and in rushed George.

"Helen! are you safe? Thank God!" as he saw me. "How did it happen?"

"Crossed wires I guess," the chief answered. "Here in the floor. Didn't get above this one floor. Lucky that it didn't!"

"Yes, here!" and George passed a yellow-backed bill to the Chief. "Get the boys some cigars," then, "Come, Helen, the chief says the fire is out," and without waiting he gathered me in his arms and carried me upstairs.

REGRETS.

"Of course, it would happen when I was out!" he grumbled to mother, after I was comfortably propped up in bed. None of us felt that we could sleep, so Mary had gone to the kitchen with James to get some coffee.

"Your being here could not have possibly made any difference," I told him.

"I could have wakened the household at least. I hope you did not injure yourself running up and down staire. Were you terribly frightened Helen?" he leaned over me anxiously.

"No, indeed! I just knew everybody must be wakened, that was all."

"You are a very brave girl. Isn't she?" he asked mother.

"She always was fearless when a child," mother answered. She had not yet quite recovered from the fright, and her voice trembled a little, but after our coffee and some sandwiches we grew quite gay, although none of us wanted to sleep.

About three o'clock George insisted that we all try to get a little rest. I tossed uneasily. But toward morning, the doctor had to be called.

In the morning my baby boy was born. And there was never a happier person in the world than was I when George gathered us both in his arms.

CHILDREN MUST BE PROTECTED

The children must be safeguarded, for, if they do survive the frequent coughs and colds, it is often with the lungs so weakened that they become chronic sufferers from bronchitis or consumption. Being composed of simple ingredients of undoubted value, Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine is admirably suited as a treatment for children. It is pleasant to taste. So much so that children delight to take it on this account, as well as because of the quick relief it affords them.

A Golden Girl

By Frances Elizabeth Lauren

It was a desolate appearing studio, hinting of a past more opulent, but the room was practically bare of embellishment, the fireplace was empty, upon the table was a half-loaf of bread and a jug of water.

"Where now?" inquired Ward Elsler, who was striding the room to keep warm, an expression of discontent and discouragement on his face.

"Going forth in quest of fortune," retorted his brother. "Come," and he assumed vast jubilant spirit. "Who knows but I may strike some luck, enabling you to enjoy a real full meal."

"Always thinking of me," spoke the other tenderly. "I've brought you to a nice pass, haven't I?"

"What?" rallied Vance Elsler, "bohemianizing to our heart's content! Cheer up, the dawn is sure to break!"

"That's him—never say die!" muttered Ward Elsler. "I've got him into a tight fix with my foolish speculations. Well, thank goodness, I've got strong enough to go to work, and a position is open for me Monday. I'll work my finger nails off to make up for the ruin I've caused him."

Vance Elsler's face lost all its counterfeit cheerfulness once away from his brother's presence. He went down the hall to an old lumber room, fished out a ragged fur cap with ear flaps and a pair of mittens, well-worn but thick. He tied string about his trousers over the ankles to keep out the snow, then he sallied forth. It was not snowing now, but the city had just experienced the storm of a century. Everywhere gangs of men were clearing sidewalks and trolley tracks. In front of an opera house Vance was halted by a man who was directing a dozen men, busily engaged in removing the great mounds of snow from the street in front of the structure, so that automobiles and carriages could drive up.

"Here, you!" he spoke to Vance, "a dollar and a half an hour for playing in the snow. Pick up a shovel and take some exercise," and Vance started in with the others.

Glancing up as an automobile swung to the curve, Vance pulled his storm cap down over his face. An august-looking old man was helping out a young lady, beautiful, serene, gorgeous in her expensive furs.

Alma Duncan, the heiress—her father, the millionaire! There passed before his mind the golden days, and not so very far back, either, when he had been an honored guest at the palatial home of the Duncans. And she—he had loved her in secret.

In another hour his task was completed. He received his pay and started to cross the street when a bright, glittering object in the snow attracted his attention. He secured it, wondering if it was some gewgaw, or of real value. It was a sunburst pin, set with sparkling white stones.

"Vance, rouse up, old fellow!" hailed his brother, when he reached his room. "We'll have our grand meal, if we never have another one." At the restaurant Vance told of the unnecessary work that had made the least possible. Then he showed his brother the pin.

"Why, you're made a precious find!" declared Ward.

He was up bright and early, went out to the street and returned in a state of high excitement.

"It's advertised," he announced. "Lost in the opera house or its vicinity. Liberal reward. Apply to John Wisner, lawyer, Portland building. Come on, Vance. I'll go with you and share the joy of seeing real money once more."

The dignified lawyer examined the jewelry and opened his checkbook.

"My client telephoned me late last night to pay a reward of one hundred dollars," he said; but at that moment the client in question came into the room—Miss Alma Duncan!

Vance became erect. What he read in the gentle eyes of Alma was pity for his threadbare attire, pain because she read aright the cause of his no longer calling upon her.

"I can accept no reward in returning what I found to a friend—I hope," he said proudly.

"To more than a friend," she murmured, coming to his side and placing her hand on his arm. "Oh, Mr. Elsler! Why have you neglected us?"

"I'll tell you!" burst forth the impetuous Ward. "You are the young lady he talks of in his dreams, whose picture in the studio is the only framed one that he has not sold or pawned to keep my unworthy self from starving. He ruined himself paying my debts. He worked shoveling snow last night, to feed me."

"Stop!" ordered Vance, but the disclosure had produced its effect. Alma sank to a chair, covering her face with her hands, crying like a child.

"You will come to see me? Oh, Mr. Elsler! promise that you will allow myself, my father and your other true, loyal friends to mean all that she pleaded.

There came to Vance the next day an order from Lawyer Wisner to paint the portraits of all the living and dead presidents of a local bar association, so he had no need to ask friends for money aid.

But, once more on his feet, he did ask the dearest one of them all, Alma Duncan, for love, and oh! how gladly, how freely was it given!

IDEAL PLACE FOR SOLITUDE

Bird Island, in Gulf of St. Lawrence, One of World's Most Desolate Spots.

Bird Island, most northerly of the Magdalen Islands, holds the world's record for wrecks. The whole group, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, is exceedingly dangerous, but Bird Island stands first. More like a huge rock than an island its walls rise grim and gray in the path of the mariner. The island has no beach or coast, only a steep irregular cliff rising abruptly from the water. The top is a barren plateau of about five acres.

The principal inhabitants are birds. Gulls, gannets and murres come in thousands to nest and rear their young. The roar of their thousands of wings drowns the noise of the waters. The Indians say that they are the souls of shipwrecked sailors.

The human tenants of the plateau are the lighthouse keeper and his wife, doomed to solitary existence except about once or twice a year when a ship brings provisions. Sometimes, perhaps in about every three or four years, an enterprising naturalist comes to study the bird life on the island.

Ships can approach Bird island only in the calmest weather. The slightest ripple and the craft keeps a respectful distance. The lighthouse is reached by a rope and windlass. The hardiest mountain climber would hesitate before attempting to scale its rough gray walls.

The keepers of the light have been singularly unfortunate. The first went insane and had to be kept confined by his wife and assistant until the provision boat arrived. The second was borne away by a floating piece of ice when seal hunting in the early spring. His wife maintained the lighthouse alone until help came from a neighboring island.

Shell Shocked Nerves

Shattered nerves are the source of greatest suffering to many a returned soldier.

The doctor can give something to relieve physical pain but when the nervous system breaks down and you are sleepless, nervous and mentally worried, real cure only comes when the exhausted nerve cells are nourished back to health and vigor by such restorative, upbuilding treatment as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Canadian Masons In England

H. S. Carmichael, Passenger and Freight Manager of the Canadian Pacific Ocean Services, was installed W. M. of the Canada Lodge at the installation banquet held recently in London, England, attended by the Rt. Hon Sir Edward Clarke, Sir Gilbert Parker, General J. G. Ross and many other Canadians and English representative men interested in Canada.

The Canada Lodge No. 2527 on the Register of the United Grand Lodge of England was founded in 1911, in order to provide a Masonic centre for Canadians resident in Great Britain and Brethren from the Dominion visiting the Old Country. The object of the founders was also to form a bond of union between the Brethren of the Dominion and the Brethren of the United Kingdom in the strong hope and confidence that Freemasonry might so even still further assist in the great work of forming these bonds of "indissoluble attachment" which shall forever unite the component parts of the British Empire. The Lodge has now 282 members, many of whom are Dominion members resident in all parts of Canada. No fewer than 150 are initiates of the Lodge, 205 members of the Lodge are on active service in H. M. Forces.

Mr. Hugh Strain Carmichael, the newly-elected W. M. of Canada Lodge, is a native of Glasgow. He has been connected with the Transatlantic steamship trade since 1888, when he joined the staff of the State Line, which in 1891 was taken over by the Allan Line. In 1895 he commenced his long connection with the Canadian Pacific Company at Glasgow, transferring to its Liverpool office in 1903, when the company established its transatlantic passenger service. In 1908 he was promoted to be general passenger agent for Great Britain and Europe. Since the establishment, in 1915-16, of the Canadian Pacific Ocean Services, Ltd., which manages the entire fleet of the C. P. R. and Allan Lines, Mr. Carmichael has occupied the position of passenger and freight manager, and has his headquarters at Waterloo Place, London, England.

The Turning Point

By WALTER JOSEPH DELANEY

Nellie, her pretty face speckled with flour dust, her arms deep to the elbows in the spongy dough, whirled from her task and at lightning speed flew down the beaten path leading to the little flagman's shanty, a hundred feet distant.

She had heard the whistle of the Limited, half an hour late, and had barely time to dash into the shanty and seize the white hand signal with "Stop!" painted upon it in black staring letters, and get in position in the middle of the road and wave it in warning at approaching pedestrians and vehicles, when the glaring headlight of the onrushing train approached.

The coaches were a blur except the last one, amid a cloud of dust, but brilliantly lighted, and at the open window of one of its staterooms Nellie caught a confused sight of a man and a woman, and then something whirled toward her with gyrating force, grazed her cheek, making it sting, struck the ground and rolled into the gutter.

Nellie waved the signal of safe thoroughfare and advancing toward the object, picked it up. It was a lady's handbag, its sides bulging as though from closely packed contents. Nellie returned to the little cottage that was the home of her half uncle, old Joel Page, the only relative she had.

Old Jacob had seen his best days. He sat around home all day except for guarding the crossing when a train was coming through. Every now and then his old failing for strong drink overcame him and Nellie, as now, acted in his place.

Again in the kitchen, she placed the handbag on a shelf, resumed her duties at the bread pan, later got supper and carried a portion on a tray to her uncle, who was laid up with rheumatism and the effects of a two weeks' debauch. Then Nellie tidied herself up and went out and sat on the front steps. Her eyes brightened as a young man, limping and supporting himself with a cane, came into view, greeted her with a kiss and she made way for him beside her.

"No word from the company yet, dear?" she inquired.

"Yes, Nellie, they won't help out on my hospital bill. They say that any man so foolish as to risk his life to save a stray dog from being run over, ought to learn a lesson. However, they'll give me back my old position soon as I am mended up. Then we'll have to begin to save all over again, eh, littlestone? How is Mr. Page?"

"As bad as ever, Walter," replied Nellie. "If he would only let the strong drink alone! When he can get around his old mates encourage his failing, and when he is laid up they bring the vile liquor to him. Oh, dear! I wish we could get away to some new place where the temptations would be less for him."

"Cheer up, little woman," encouraged Walter. "All that may come in time."

When Nellie went into the house she remembered the handbag. She carried it up to her room, and as she unloosed the catch of the bag she stood startled as she noted that the bag was crammed quite full of bank notes. There must have been thousands of dollars in the little receptacle. She gasped, she looked around in a startled way, as though fearful that some prying eye might be observing and seek to wrest her treasure from her. Her treasure? Ah, no! If the breath of a temptation sent a momentary vivid picture of affluence and the coveted new home run through her mind, in an instant she shut it out.

She ran to the shanty where there was a telephone and called up the depot, reporting the finding of a satchel bearing one initial "C," and describing its color and texture.

Bad news reached Nellie the next day. The company had decided to place a more active man than her uncle at the crossing. The company, too, interested that Walter, when he resumed railroad service, would have to begin all over again, several grades down the line. And then came good news, and grand luck!

A lady, young and beautiful, came to the little cottage. She was "C," the owner of the satchel. Nellie told of finding it when it dropped from the car window.

"It did not drop, dear," said the visitor. "I threw it out. Shall I tell you the woeful story of a foolish girl trusting to the avowed love of a mercenary villain? I married him, converted the property my parents had left me into money, and it was on the train that he tried to possess the money and abandon me. He struck me, even choked me, in our compartment on the train. I was determined he should not get the money and threw it out of the window. When we got to the city I sought the protection of the police and a lawyer, and they will see that this base schemer does not trouble me again. Won't you let me stay here in your cosy little home for a week or two, to get over all the shock and strain of my unfortunate situation?"

Nellie acquiesced. It meant the start of a great mutual friendship. It meant more in time, a new start in life for Nellie and Walter, and even their old dependent, old Joel, for Alma Bristol, the forsaken bride, established them in a home of their own, and, after her bitter experience, craved no surer surcease from her sorrow than their constant companionship.

London's Tea Houses.

The death of Sir Joseph Lyons reminds us what a modern institution the teashop is. You need not be very old to remember the time when practically the only places where a cup of tea could be obtained in London were the old fashioned coffee houses, with their boxed-in compartments and narrow, uncomfortable seats.

The customers were exclusively men, and if a woman required light refreshment she had to search for a confectioner's shop, where tea and coffee were sometimes grudgingly served, at famine prices, at little round marble tables tucked away in dark corners.—London Chronicle.

Used Stamps Valueless.

The Red Cross wishes to make it known, as widely as possible, that the report that used postage stamps have any value through the extraction of the dyes contained in them is absolutely false. This false report has already resulted in the receipt by the post office department of many stamps collected by misguided patriots who sought thus to do something to help win the war.—The Outlook.

Use More Milk

LET milk play a bigger part in your daily diet. Use more milk—for health's sake. Use more milk—for economy's sake. Use more milk—for loyalty's sake.

Food specialists, doctors, experts all say that milk is one of the richest and most nourishing foods that Nature provides. And it is one of the most economical.

At this season of the year you should use lots of milk. Drink it at every meal—as a food. Let it take the place of meat, bacon, and other foods needed "over there." Use more of it in your cooking—because it adds a richer flavor, because it is more nourishing, because it aids digestion.

Try using more milk in your diet—for one week. See how much better you feel. See how much you save.

MAKE Carnation Milk Week August 15th to August 22nd—a memorial week in your home. Become better acquainted with the goodness, the many uses, the economy of milk—Nature's first food. And become acquainted with Carnation Milk—Nature's first food in absolutely pure form.

Into thousands of homes—all over Canada and the United states—we shall be introducing this better milk during the week of August 15th to August 22nd.

Thousands of new homes will learn that Carnation Milk is milk in its handiest form—in its safest form —that, unopened, it will keep fresh for weeks!

—that it is economical (no waste)

—that it can be ordered with your groceries!

CARNATION MILK is rich, pure milk "from Contented Cows." It is "whole milk"—evaporated to the consistency of cream. Then sealed in air-tight cans and sterilized. Nothing but water is taken out of it. Nothing is put in to sweeten or to preserve it. It is just pure whole milk—of uniform richness and quality—sealed safe from contamination.

And you can use it for everything—for cooking—for creaming vegetables and soups—as cream for coffee—diluted, as a safe, nourishing drink for your children. It is the only milk supply your home needs.

Order a week's supply of Carnation Milk from your grocer—he is the Carnation Milkman. Always keep a few cans handy for unexpected needs.

LOCAL FIGHTING IN PROGRESS ON WEST FRONT

Lines Have Been Consolidated And Trench Warfare Is In Order

The British Line Was Advanced as Result of Severe Local Fighting During the Night

Patrols Rushed a Post North of Albert—Raiding Parties Active on All Fronts.

OFFICIAL REPORTS

LONDON (Official), August 15.—The British line has been advanced slightly east of Rainescourt in the district northwest of Chaulnes, on the Picardy battle front.

THE STATEMENT READS.

Severe local fighting took place last night to our advantage east of Rainescourt, our line was advanced slightly in this neighbourhood. One of our patrols rushed a post north of Albert capturing a machine gun. Below Albert and Ayette our patrols were active throughout the night, and have maintained close touch with the enemy. Further progress was made at a number of points, and several machine guns were taken. Hostile raiding parties were repulsed last night southeast of Arras, near Germille. The enemy artillery was active east of Robecq and the Charpen sector of Flanders. The total number of prisoners captured by the British fourth army on the morning of August 8 is now 21,844. In the same point the prisoners taken by the French fourth army amount to 8,000, making a total of 30,344 German prisoners captured in the operations of the Allied army on the Montdidier-Albert front.

News From Paris.

PARIS, August 15.—Including a thousand Germans taken by General Hubert in the operations which are still developing, the prisoners captured on the western front since July 15 total 73,000, and 1,700 guns have been seized by the Allies.

Canadian Press:

LONDON, Aug. 15. — The French have captured all the high ground on the Lassigny Massif and are working down north and eastern sides so that further retreat of the enemy in that sector is probable.

Moving Back.

BRITISH HEADQUARTERS IN FRANCE, Aug. 15.— Canadian Press Despatches From Reuter's Limited.—General Ludendorff's recent order that ground must be given up if holding on entails an undue expenditure of man power, is largely responsible for the German withdrawal around Albert. The wonderful success of light tanks has probably impressed the German High Command with the desirability of getting behind the River Ancre wherever possible.

Retired Two Miles.

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 15. — (3.37 p.m.)—The Germans have withdrawn one to two miles on a nine mile front, at the western edge of the Flanders salient, according to information received here this afternoon.

Vieux-Berquin, three miles north of Merville, was evacuated during the withdrawal.

Continue to Advance.

(By John De Gandt.)

PARIS, Aug. 15.—The French are continuing their infiltration of the German positions in the Oise Valley north and east of Ribecourt. Their outposts are established in the borders of Pimprez (a mile east of Ribecourt), and Drestincourt (a mile north). They have also reached the southern part of Ourscamps Forest (extending from Pimprez to Wilhq, two miles of Noyon). German artillery is heavily gassing Lassigny Grove (a mile southwest of the village).

THE WEATHER

After the oppressive heat of Tuesday, when the thermometer went up to 98 degrees, the highest yesterday was but 77. To-day figures are about the same. Last night's lowest was 55. for this summer at least.—W.P.

Turkey is Getting Tired of Being Controlled by Germans

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, August 15.—(By the British Admiralty Wireless)—Differences between the Germans and the Turks are becoming more frequent and bitter, according to information received from Constantinople. The trouble is partly due to a quarrel with Talaat Passa recently, because the German Ambassador is reported to have threatened to bombard the city.

Advices from Constantinople say that leaflets dropped by the British aviators are read by the population with sympathetic interest. Posters recently found on the walls of the Mosques and government buildings, declare that the Germans are the real enemy of Turkey and called for strong protest from the German Ambassador and a demand for an investigation.

Burleigh Road Has Not Been Neglected, Says Reeve Nicholls

And County Councillors Deny That the Kawartha Park Association Has Ever Paid "Hundreds of Dollars" for the Maintenance of Roads.

LAUGHS AT REPORT

"Who are the Kawartha Park Association?" Some members of the County Council were seeking this information this morning. They had a copy of the Examiner with the recent item in which the Kawartha Association asserted that "We pay hundreds of dollars a year to the County Council." They were slightly peeved over the condition of the Burleigh Road, and expressed their intention of inviting Reeve Nicholls of Smith, to take a "joy ride" over it in company with them.

"I know the road well," said the reeve to-day at the informal discussion outside the Court House. "Smith has spent $240 on it this year, and a short time ago I secured a grant of $400 from the Government."

It was accordingly proved that the road had not been neglected—but that was only a side issue. The councillers want to know first who are the Kawartha Park Association; second, how many hundred dollars (or cents) they ever contributed to the county; and third, when they made such contributions. To say that the reeves are dubious is wide of the mark. They simply don't believe; and furthermore they assert that the Kawartha Park Association contributes nothing for the maintainance of the Burleigh road—or any of the county's roads.

AN EDUCATION FOR PETERBORO CHILDREN

If you value an education for your children you will see that they get down on the morning of the first or not later than the second opening day of "Chautauqua" so that they will be able to take part in the great "Pageant" that will be put on in the afternon of thesixth day of "Chautauqua Week.' It will take all practice that they can get to make the thing the success it ought to be be. The Junior Leader is college graduate especially trained in this work and your children will not only have the privilege of taking part in the "Pageant" but there will be a hundred and one other features that will appeal to children such as the singing of patriotic songs, telling stories, games, contests and dances.

Make it a point to see that your children between the ages of six and fourteen get down every morning except Sunday morning at 9 o'clock to Central Park.

Resistance Is Stiffening

Trench Warfare Has Been Resumed —Reinforcements Arrive.

(United Press.)

(By Wm. Philip Simms.)

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN FRANCE, Aug. 15.—It is a week today since Field Marshal Haig crossed through the German lines between the Ancre and the Avre, carrying the war into the open fields across the plateau east of Amiens.

To-day finds the lines resolidified and trench warfare going on again. The Germans are prepared to put up a stiff fight anywhere between Albert and Noyon. Crown Prince Rupprecht has massed between thirty and forty divisions there (probably from 360,000 to 480,000 men).

HUNS STILL RETIRING

Amiens Cathedral Has Again Been Rededicated—What Captured Reports Reveal.

WEATHER FINE

(By William Phillip Simms—United Press).

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN FRANCE, Aug. 15.—The German withdrawal towards Bapaume (ten miles north-east of Albert and four miles east of the Ancre) apparently is still under way. The Boches have their backs toward the Amiens Cathedral, which to-day was re-didicated. It has been unused, locked up and protected with sand bags since the civilian evacuation of Amiens in March. The re-opening coincides with the great feast of the Assumption.

Weather is Fine.

The Germans also brought up more artillery. Few German planes are seen over the lines. The Germans are still on the defensive in the air, as well as on the ground. This is due largely to their inability to replace losses. An airman taken prisoner admits these are very high—more higher than the reports indicate. He says he knows of cases of suppression of losses, while a captured report, replying to the infantry's complaint that German airmen do not aid them when Allied planes are attacking from low altitudes, says the infantry must remember that owing to the limited number of fighting planes, these have to be used where they will do the most good, which is carrying out reconnaissances.

Nevertheless, one sees very few German planes in the rear areas compared with the large numbers of our machines seen crossing the enemy's lines, headed east.

The weather for the past two days has been superb in the battle zone. Although the ground fighters seem to be marking time, the airmen seem neither to eat nor sleep. They are giving the Germans a very thin time.

Extensive Whitewear Sale at Turnbull's

A Boon to Ladies Who Have Difficulty in Securing Scarce Goods

The world conditions of to-day are exerting a considerable bearing upon ladies' wearables throughout the country; and from all appearances smaller and more conservative supplies, with an increasing tendency upwards in price is looked for during the continuance of this world-wide war. These facts should have an important bearing upon the fortunate extensive sale of whitewear, summer dresses, etc., announced by the Turnbull Co. in to-day's issue of the Examiner. What this sale is calculated to effect in assisting Peterborough feminity in solving their lingerie and other needs is quite apparent.

A large manufacturer's complete set of elegant whitewear samples, as well as white and coloured dresses, middy waists and wash skirts, came into possession of the Turnbull store recently in a lucky manner, the details of which are not necessary, and now they are to be offered for the approval and selection of Peterborough ladies at figures actually below present factory prices. It is scarcely possible that goods of this character will be offered again at such prices during the duration of the war. The Turnbull announcement appears in a half-page advertisement in to-day's issue, and will, of course, be eagerly perused by our lady readers.

POLICY OF AMERICANS

Draft Law to be Amended to Provide for a Larger Army—One to Whip the Germans

NEXT SUMMER

Special to the Examiner:

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15.—In expectation of having two million three hundred thousand trained American troops in France before June 30, 1919, Secretary of War Baker and his aides to-day presented a new draft law to the Senate Committee, amending the draft age, making it 18 to 45. The purpose of the Americans, said General March, is to furnish manpower to whip the Germans from now on. The only way that the Germans can be whipped is for America to go into this fight with their whole strength. It is my belief that with an army of four million Americans in France, under one Commander-in-Chief, we can go through the German lines wherever we please, General March said. President Wilson had announced that the American military policy was centred on the Western front, and the country would not be diverted from this.

OTTAWA, Aug. 15.—Street cars ran as usual to-day with all the old employees at work. The question of wages is now in the hands of the Board of Appeal.

Board of Arbitration Visits C.G.E. Shops

The Board of Arbitration which opened its sessions here yesterday, visited the C.G.E. shops this morning for the purpose of observing the general location of the departments, distribution of employees, and of meeting some of the men themselves, it was stated. In the meantime, the representatives of the company and of the men held a conference at the Court House in an attempt to reach an agreement on the classification of the employees. The Board returned to the Court House this afternoon to continue their investigation.

It was reported yesterday that the classification or grading of the men is one of the principal questions in dispute and that the departments directly interested are the machine shop and the tool room. It should have been added that the electrical workers have a case to lay before the Board. There are two hundred women engaged in different branches of this work. They were recently organized as a union in affiliation with the I.B.E.W. The fixing of a minimum wage for these workers is one of the requests which it is understood will be presented for the consideration of the arbiters.

SERGT. BLADE WILL REMAIN ON THE POLICE FORCE.

Patrol Sergeant Blade has decided to withdraw his resignation from the force, which he tendered about three weeks ago.

CHAUTAUQUA PROGRAMME.

The only change that has been made in the programme, is one necessitated by the injury to Father McCorry, which prevents him being present to give his lecture, as he is still confined to the hospital. The speaker who is taking his place will be further announced to-morrow.

ROOSEVELT HAD ONLY ONE REGRET

PARIS, Aug. 15.—Colonel Roosevelt's answer to condolences by President Poincare on the death of Lieut. Quentin Roosevelt is published by the newspapers. "My only regret," said the Colonel, "is that I am unable to fight by the side of my sons."

Rescued By Soldier's Son

Gordon Thomas Saved Girl From Drowning in Boyler's Creek—Father Was Killed With 21st Battalion.

SHOULD BE RECOGNIZED

Gordon Thomas, son of the late Sergt. Fred Thomas, of the 21st Battalion, has in him the same elements of heroism that was shown by his father in his early enlistment in the war, long service and supreme sacrifice. A few days ago Gordon was swimming in Boyler's creek, on the east side of the river, below the G.T.R. bridge. This is one of the popular bathing places, especially for the younger folk. It is on an arm of the river and is not so awesome as the wide, deep, main stream. In places it is beyond the depth of the young folk, and on this particular afternoon one of the little girls in the party suddenly floundered beyond the dividing line of safety, sank in the deep water and would surely have drowned but for the prompt action of Gordon Thomas who swam out to her. In his first attempt to bring her to shore, her weight and excitement left him helpless and both of them sank, but coming up again the boy recovered control and swam to the shallows.

When he went home that night he never mentioned his experience to his mother, who usually shares his confidences, but the next day his cousin came over, and quite naturally mentioned Gordon's exploit, to the mother's great surprise. Neither of the boys knew the little girl, and as she quickly recovered from the effects of several submergings, the youngsters had no occasion to learn her identity. But the modesty of this boy is as appealing as his brave rescue, and several of his late father's friends, through whom the Examiner was informed of the boy's deed, believe that the saving of this girl's life should be recognized.

Visiting Friends In Peterboro

Fruit Crop in Hamilton District is Light.

Mr. M. W. Matchett, of the E. D. Smith Company, Hamilton, was in the city to-day. He is visiting his family at Port Hope for a day or two where they are holidaying with their relatives.

His daughter, Iola, was severely injured in an automobile accident several weeks ago, in which she had the misfortune to have her collar bone broken, and otherwise injured. She is progressing as well as could be expected.

Mr. Matchett says the fruit crop in his district has been short, compelling higher prices.

The energy and devotion they previously displayed in promoting the public's welfare is a strong assurance that they will give their new duties the closest attention.

It is worth noting, too, that Sanitary Inspector Stapleton and his assistant, Mr. F. W. Miller, have resisted the temptations, that must have visited them, to ask for higher salaries. Mr. Stapleton has been industrious and tactful, and it should be unnecessary, if the city fully appreciated these qualities in its servants, to intimate that he and Mr. Miller have been ignored. In certain respects, the Sanitary Inspector is the most necessary and valuable employee in the municipality, and under the present conditions the Council should make generous salary increases in this department, at the same time instructing Mr. Stapleton that he can't be too drastic in his measures to protect the purity of the city's food, and otherwise to safeguard public health.

AMERICAN OPINION OF KING GEORGE.

A four years' brotherhood-in-arms has revealed the Allied nations to each other so effectually that the old conceptions have undergone a sweeping revision. It is needless to dilate upon this universal experience, which while retaining the stimulation of discovery, has already lost its novelty. National ideals and racial virtues have been evaluated at their true worth under the fierce light of war, and national institutions have been subjected to the ceaseless strain of gothic attacks that have found in Russia one notable victim.

In the lighter side of their associations the Allies are discovering in each other qualities and conditions which they gradually realize they had misconstrued. One of these changing opinions is the average American's estimate of Britain's King, in his personality and functions. It is safe to say that until recently the great majority of our neighbours regarded George V. as the complement of the Kaiser, something of a dictator or tyrant like that other George of whom the American histories have left little untold. But many of the soldiers of Uncle Sam have seen King George and Queen Mary have felt their warm sympathy and interest and heard them voice Britain's welcome and her appreciation of their aid. These sons of the Revolution have found the Sovereign a kindly gentleman as approathable, genial and entirely human as the rest of men.

Such was also the recent experience of a Kansas Congressman, at whose expense the New York Times indulges its humour as follows:

King George V. has won golden opinions from all sorts of people by his frank, modest, sympathetic, democratic manner. Reading of Kings in novels, histories, and tragedies, one gets a notion of something lofty, remote, purpureal; something, say, between "cold roast Boston" and an old-fashioned drum major, between the proud porter of a hotel de luxe on the Azure Coast and the Grand Lama. Whereas your modern King makes it his business to be agreeable; and the King of Italy and the King of England are genuine democratic "mixers," who make themselves, or can't help being, agreeable.

George V. has met all kinds of folks, and his simplicity, his kindness, his readiness to please and be pleased, are known to multitudes; but the final seal of his social qualities wasn't sealed and delivered until last week, when Kansas accepted and ratified him.

Kansas is faithful to her own standards. She is hard to please. When, therefore, Mr. John R. Connelly, Representative in Congress of the Sixth Kansas District, describing the impressions of a committee of travelling Congressmen who met the King, says that the latter "gave us a regular Kansas handshake," is "a most human fellow," and "treated us fine—just as if he "were the Mayor of a small Kansas "town," the culmination of eulogy has been reached. The inaccessible austere bosom of Kansas is thawed. The King is "all right."

These Kansans of credit and renown are so much before the public that something of the first dew of modesty may have fallen from them. "Like the Mayor of a small Kansas town," who knows everybody in it, neighbourly, friendly, unpretentious, cordial. The force of panegyric can no further go. King George is approved and adopted by the most difficult State in the world.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

If Canada's gates are to be barred to the people of India, they should be doubly bolted against Frank Carvell's Chinamen.

Lieut. J. R. Stratton is apparntly not missing much of the "big show" in Europe, the while enhancing his decorations for distinguished service.

Those two farm women who were injured a few days ago in harvest work near Blenheim, Ont., deserve a place in the casualty list of the war.

A farmer near Woodstock cashed 19 head of cattle for $3,450, and a neighbour threshed $1,150 worth of barley from 14 acres. And despite the extraordinary prices for produce many a farmer pretends that the old homestead is operating at a loss.

Woodchucks are overrunning Lindsay, and the Post frankly decides the town's class by giving the information that very seldom have they been known to roam in places other than farms.

President Wilson's order to the automobile factories that they get down to a 100 per cent. war basis by January 1st simply means that decrepit jitneys will be worth their weight in gold next summer instead of old iron.

WHAT OTHER EDITORS SAY

A Hard Lesson.

But it has taken the Ally governments four years to realize and act upon the old truth that in unity is strength.—Hamilton Herald.

It is said carpentry is about the only trade English women have not entered. Their inability to handle a hammer is proverbial, but there are some good knockers among women.—London Advertiser.

Cleveland's Way.

Cleveland has adopted a novel plan for mourning its soldier dead. For each Cleveland soldier who loses his life in this war a victory oak will be planted along one of the boulevards, and each of the oaks will be named for a soldier. This will constitute a beautiful and enduring memorial, and the idea is one which might be followed advantageously by other cities. —Brantford Expositor.

"Fiendish Extremes."

"While we can understand that common instincts of humanity are lacking in Germany; that such instincts have been carefully eradicated by the military system of education; that Germany is without pity, what we cannot understand is that Germany goes to such purely fiendish extremes as the murder of wounded men and non-combatant women. If there was any military object to be gained by such slaughter she might have an excuse, poor though it might be. But the sinking of hospital ships is the work of merciless monsters deliberately defying all civilization."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Government 5 p.c. Money

To assist in building homes for workingmen has caused several to buy LOTS from us recently. Four Lots sold yesterday, and the unsold Lots, whether under crop or not, are being marked to enable any person wishing to buy, to see the Lots that are still for sale, and if justice is meted out men who show a disposition to help themselves, will surely get the preference of the 5 per cent. money to enable them to build. Secure Lots now in the City or suburbs and OWN YOUR HOME. Come to Office. We can help you in many ways.

LIEUT. W. E. JACKSON REPORTED MISSING

Had Only Been in France a Short Time.

Flight Lieut. W. E. Jackson, whose home is at 232 Perry street, has been reported missing since August 10th. He had been in France about a month. Lieut. Jackson trained in Texas last winter and was a pupil of Vernon Castle. Later in the year he was sent overseas and shortly afterwards was transferred to France.

Lieut. Jackson was a member of the draughting room staff of the Canadian General Electric Company. He was well known in local hockey circles.

The Royal Dragoons At the Chautauqua

Are Entertainers of Exceptional Ability.

Nine men of great musical ability with real personalities, nine men who really sing well, and artists at playing the various band instruments will be one of the most unusual, most spectacular gigantic agration of artist of their stand ever seen in Peterborough or vicinity. These men have come as a soloist, are a concert in themselves and if there was not another thing in the whole Chautauqua Week, but the Royal Dragoons' Singing Band, you would get your moneys worth, but there is a great deal more to see.

They are one of the most talked-of musical organizations in America to-day. They have appeared during the past season in every important American city and have captured the city press, the severest critics in the world.

From Philadelphia: "Made a splendid appearance, and were encored time after time."

From Chicago: "They played Sousa music just as though Sousa were there to direct it."

From Atlantic City: "A wonderful singing aggregation, were in splendid voice and their selections were enthusiastically encored."

These actors were honoured by an appearance on the White House lawn before American Presidents and American celebrities.

Peterboro Will Not Be Affected to Any Extent

FEW ALIENS HERE SUBJECT TO DRAFT LAWS.

Negotiations under way between the French, Italian, Belgian and other allied governments to enforce the military service regulations among men of these different nationalities in Canada, will not affect Peterboro to any great extent, as far as the Italian element is concerned as there are at the most but ten Italians eligible for service in the vicinity. Of these ten probably all would go willingly with very little encouragement, as some who have already been approached have answered that they will go when the country calls them. So far 60 have responded to the call; several went with the 93rd, and the balance for the most part paid their own way home and joined in Italy.

ITALIAN MILITARY SERVICE.

Outside of those who are eligible by reason of their age, any Italian may be called upon by his government to serve according to his ability.

In Italy politics are separate from the army and the married man is as liable to be called up as the single one. No pull helps the Italian soldier, no exemption can be secured; there is no Kingston to create officers or give exemptions. As soon as a boy is 16 years of age he is liable for service; at 20 he must present himself, when the officials will decide for him what branch he is qualified for. At 39 years he may leave the country; before that only by a special permit, when he is still liable for service.

To-day under present conditions the different allied countries respect the constitution of each other, and men may be called upon to serve in their own country according to military regulations in that country.

As the expected enforcement of military service covers Greeks, French, etc., there will be several other young men called up presently.

New Pictorial Fashion Books

Any Garment You Like ELLIOTS Have It. 392 George Peterboro

Just Arrived 900 lbs. Red Cross Knitting Wool

Our READY-TO-WEAR DEPT. is becoming the centre of greater interest every day.

What Shall We Say About the New Coats?

We are so enthusiastic about the new styles that we could fill fully two of these columns telling about the displays, but there is one thing in particular that stands out above the rest. The whole secret of the beauty of these new garments lies in their simplicity. Freakish styles are taboo—and you will not find a single one in this collection. We have exerted unusual efforts to have each coat represent a special style feature. The use of fur by designers is very important and just enough of it is used to reduce the cost and to give to the coat a smart touch of becomingness. Here we must limit ourselves to the description and if you are to choose the best style from among these, it is only natural that you be urged to make immediate selection.

Prices in a very broad range; these coats may be had as low as $18.00 and rise step by step to $50.00.

Credit for a Good Appearance Is Due to Your Corset as Much as to Clothes

If we knew of some way to emphasize this more forcibly we would do so. With the change of seasons and the need for a new corset that is suited to warmer weather and light, dainty clothes, we suggest that you have our corsetierre try on you on of the new $1.75 front lacing models.

New Poplin Skirts, $7.25

Such an air of smartness about them! Some of the models have plaiting in front, others box-plaited but for the most part plain. As if such skirts needed trimming! Belts are also an important feature. More than a dozen attractive models. Nor is this the only price, there are others up to $24.00

A Story of a One Dollar Bill and a Certain Pair of Silk Stockings

This one dollar bill was tucked neatly away in a lady's purse which she carried in a very fine handbag.

The one dollar bill expected to be taken home in the same place it had been brought out for a stroll, but after Mi Lady had entered our store and made a number of purchases, she chanced upon a display of silk stockings at $1.00 a pair. Straight away, she examined them, felt their texture, noted their double heels and toes, paid particular attention to the garter tops and the full length of the stocking and then said: "Are these silk stockings $1.00 a pair?" The moment Mr. One Dollar Bill heard that remark, he knew he would never reach home again, for down went Mi Lady's hand into the purse, extracted not only this Mr. One Dollar Boll, but another one as well and she carried home two pairs of these silk stockings.

CLAIMS COUNTIES BURDENED

Councillor Griffin Says Counties Given Fair Apportionment of Cost of Building Highway Bridges.

WESTON, Aug. 15.—In reply to the recent criticism of the Counties of York and Halton, in the laying of the blame for the delay on the construction of bridges on the Toronto and Hamilton highway, by George H. Gooderham, Councillor Griffin today stated that the explanation of the president of the Highway Commission could be taken for just what it was worth.

"We did not object to the bridges being built, but we did object to what we considered an unfair apportionment of the cost of construction, on the counties," he said. "We had no desire to delay the building operations, but we declined to sit back and let the Railway and Municipal Board fasten an unfair burden on us. This matter has since been settled."

RECKONING

With Waste In

ADVERTISING

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING offers the manufacturer the best possible way to eliminate waste circulation, for it enables him to advertise where he has and can get distribution. To sell goods profitably depends largely on ability to reach the maximum number of people at the minimum cost.

Newspaper advertising is the quickest and surest means of getting retail distribution. It shows the retailer that a wide spread demand is being created.

The dealer is always ready to sell products that sell easy. He is a reader and an advertiser of the daily newspaper, and is sold on newspaper advertising, for he knows what it will do.

You prove to the retailer you are doing the utmost to help create a demand for him; this is real distribution. You can expand at will, adding steadily to your markets making each a permanent stronghold.

Munitions Workers

This is a war of industrial resources as well as of men and nations. Without the mobilization of the forces of industry for his support the soldier could not go on.

For example: without infantry no position could be occupied; without artillery no infantry dare advance. But without an unending supply of shell, the artillery is helpless.

With equal numbers the army that has the greater weight of munitions wins. It is almost a mathematical certainty.

Now we, in Canada, are not doing as well at munitions production, man for man and woman for woman, as we did last year.

The same high motives, the same tenacity of purpose and the same will to produce does not seem to inspire our munitions workers as was the case a year ago. And the situation is getting worse instead of better!

Let us then be frank about the matter.

The quantity of our munitions output must be increased, but this increase can only come if munitions workers will put the old spirit and enthusiasm into their efforts.

With men's lives at stake, surely this will be done.

Speed Up Your Output!

VIENNESE PAID BIG PRICE FOR ITALIAN LEAFLETS

Those Dropped During Raid Eagerly Seized Upon by People in the Streets—One Machine Lost.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15. — Neutral press reports that Vienna citizens paid as high as forty crowns for leaflets dropped by Italian aviators in their recent flight over the Austrian capital in giant Caproni planes are causing great satisfaction in Rome. An official despatch says the Cabinet has congratulated the air service on the feat.

The aviators reported that people in the streets of Vienna fought for possession of the leaflets, despite severe penalties against touching enemy propaganda dropped from the air.

The despatch disclosed that one of the Italians, upon being forced by motor trouble to land, set fire to his machine before surrendering.

Among the Hills in Flanders

(By Lt. J. B. Morton.)

You lose gradually the sound of the sea, and strike upwards into the dark hills. You may go for a few miles by rough tracks but soon there is not even a pathway. You meet few houses and people. There is a small village here and there, a cluster of cottages, and then desolate country again—until between two hills, by the side of a pool, you come suddenly in view of a tumbledown hut. It is little more than a hut and the discoloured thatch is worn and dishevelled. One window looks at you across the pool; and you go in through a low door. An old woman digging in a strip of garden at the back, glances up quickly, and stares at the unaccustomed sight of a human being. You cannot tell how long it is since she has seen anyone, but all around there is the silence of hills, a kind of brooding loneliness, and it is possible she sees nobody, except when she goes to a village to buy food or to fetch letters. It is difficult to remember that you are in England, that this desolate, apparently uninhabited region is part of a country at war, fighting for its existence.

The old woman will perhaps lean on her spade and talk, if she is in the mood for conversation. Often she gazes silently at you, taking in every detail, as if wondering at herself what can have brought you to such a place. You are almost a foreigner in her eyes. Sometimes she talks about the garden, about the flowers that are expected shortly, the vegetables she has planted, the changes in the weather; or she will give you scraps of news picked up during her last visit to the nearest village, how somebody's baby was taken mysteriously ill in the night, and what the great winds did to somebody else's roof. You begin to think how curious it must be to know nothing of war, to live in the old world of early 1914, to have one's life filled with a thousand and one small interests. But she tells you that there is a rumour in the village of a man who has come back from distant places with strange tales, and of another who came lately up from the sea coast with the stumps of his legs and a hideous furrow over one eye. Then you realize that after all some shadow or echo of the war has come to her, perhaps to disturb the calm of her life:

"What sort of tales do they tell?" you ask.

"Strange tales. Cruel battles."

"Battles?"

"Like enough they come from the war, would it be?"

"The war?"

"The big war over the waters."

You find after all that she does know of the war, and you wonder if it has touched her life in any way.

"What do you think of the war?" you ask.

"The war? It is the Devil's war."

"Do you know any who are fighting?"

"Ah, they've taken the young lads, and the men from all the villages."

"What do the villagers say to that?"

"They say it is the Devil's war. Sarah says when there are no men left to go she will go herself."

"Sarah?"

"Sarah is the post woman. I have my letters from her."

"You get letters here?"

"From my boys."

"They are away then."

"They are at the war. Three of them."

Then you look at the garden, and understand why the old woman works at it. The war has come up into these desolate hills. It is a real thing even here.

As you turn to go she takes up her spade again and begins to dig, and if you are fortunate as you go back towards the sea you may meet one of the tellers of strange tales.

How You Can Make Hairs Quickly Disappear

(Helps to Beauty.)

Even a stubborn growth of hair will quickly vanish from the face neck or arms, after a single treatment with delatone. To remove the hairs, make a stiff paste with a little powdered delatone and water, apply to hairy surface and after about 2 minutes rub off, wash the skin and it will be left free from hair or blemish. To avoid disappointment, be quite certain you get real delatone.

Should any store run short of blanks, The Examiner will print more, so that the number printed might reach as high as 40,000. The number of estimates put in the last Dollar Day Campaign was in the neighbourhood of 10,000. With this information, an estimate can be made before coming to town. Of course as many estimates can be made as the purchaser has blanks, and they will get one with every Dollar purchase they make.

An Interesting Guest.

Mr. W. F. Kerr of Cobourg has a young friend with him at "Viamede." Flight Lieut. Theodore Gobejela is a Rumanian, born in Bessarabia, which is a Rumanian province taken possession of by Russia in 1877. It is interesting to note that since the revolution in Russia Bessarabia isr again reverted to Rumania. Lieut. Goubjela's parents were large land owners his father was a man of prominence in Butharest. Both parents were assassinated by the Bolshe viki. Lieut. Gobejela was a law student in Bucharest but mobilized with the Russian Flying Corps in this war He fought on three fronts Austrian, Rumanian and Causcasion, he was three times wounded and won several decorations from courage and daring in action. Two crosses on the Rumanian front and two decorat.ons on the Austrian front.

After bringing down four German machines he was severely wounded by a German bomb and was sent to hospital. Then the revolution came and the Bolsheviki would not allow officers in the hospitals so Lieut Goubjila with a number of other officers was ent to Vladivostok but even these the Bolsheviki ruled so he got a permit to go to China and from there to Japan. In Japan he was advised to come to Canada and join the R. A. F. so he came to Canada in a Japanese ship and landed at Victoria. He was in Montreal hospital for a time and later in Cobourg Convalescent Home. His health is improving wonderfully and he hopes soon to be as fit as ever.

COUNTY COUNCIL APPEALS TO THE GOVERNMENT TO CALL OFF PETERBORO'S CROWN ATTORNEY

Irritated by Mr. Hatton's Actions in the Courts They Wish for Less Arbitrary Attitude—Review of the Incidents That Preceded Latest Dispute.

At a special session of the County Council this morning two money by-laws were amended, providing for the detachment of interest coupons to the debentures. One parcel of debentures was issued last year for $7,000 and another this year for $15,000.

By by-law passed to-day the issuance of $5,000 debentures for Court House repairs was authorized.

The following preamble and resolution were also read and approved:

Mr. Warden,—With the permission of the Council, I will bring in a resolution giving reasons why such resolution:

In 1915, Mr. Hatton purchased a typewriting machine and accessories for his office, without the sanction of the Council as provided by Statute. Upon same being directed the Typewriter Co. the Council refusing to pay for the same, to bring an action against the County to recover the money for the goods, and as expected, the Judge pointed out to him that he had no authority whatever to ask the plaintiffs to charge the goods to the County. He took upon himself to use that authority improperly." In March, 1916, he wrote a letter to the County Clerk, demanding $350 for rent, taxes, etc., for his private office, or supply him with such office suitable in the County Buildings.

Note the following: In June, 1912, the Law Association requested the Council to extend the shelving, etc., of the Law Association into the Crown Attorney's room, setting out the fact that Mr. Wood had expressed a willingness for the same and moved the resolution at a meeting of the Law Association.

The Council did as requested and Mr. Wood used the room and vault, as did also Mr. Wearing when acting Crown Attorney, as did also Mr. Hatton until the beginning of 1918 after the fire, the contractors got the key of the vault from Mr. Hatton to repair the floor around the door of the vault. Mr. Hatton lent them the key on condition they return it to him when the repairs were completed.

Following the letter from Mr. Hatton, March 1916, the Council at its first meeting after the Clerk receiving such letter (being June, 1916) appointed a committee with power to act, to equip an additional room in the buildings for Mr. Hatton.

The committee decided to equip one on the same floor as the main court room, but such additional room was refused by Mr. Hatton.

Following such refusal, the committee as per special committee report, Oct., 1916, decided to further equip the room occupied by him or the established Crown Attorney's room, to make it suitable to his particular taste, but such did not meet with his approval.

Fire destroyed the main building December, 11, 1916, and damaged the wings.

When reconstructing, the committee erected an additional room for the Crown Attorney on the ground floor at the main entrance at the stairway to the court room.

After using the old room and vault since 1915, Jan. 1st, Mr. Hatton has the Council now served with a writ to pay over to Mr. Hatton the sum of $1,200 to cover rent, taxes, etc., of his private office on the corner of George and Hunter streets, down in the heart of the city, also requests the court to force the Council to furnish him with offices suitable, but the Council has no conception of what would be suitable after proposing and providing as they have done.

The Council, consistent with substantial work, have not been behind the times in erecting court room, administration of justice offices or other provisions, either in or out of the County buildings.

The Judge, the City Police Magistrate, the Law Association and the public in general have been free to testify to such adequate and up-to-date provisions, Mr. Hatton standing alone with a complaint. Therefore:

Moved by Mr. Welsh, seconded by Mr. Brown,—That the Provincial Government be forwarded a copy of this prelude and the following resolution:

That the Government ask Mr. Hatton to be less arbitrary and if conditions do not suit him to step aside for some gentleman who would not be trailing the County into the Courts every year or so to meet the unreasonable requests of the incumbent.—Carried.

CHANGE OF WATER CAUSED DIARRHOEA

People moving from one place to another are very much subject to diarrhoea on account of the change of water, change of climate, change of diet, etc., and what at first appears to be but a slight looseness of the bowels should never be neglected or some serious bowel complaint will be sure to follow.

The safest and quickest cure for diarrhoea dysentery, colic, cholera infantum, cholera morbus, pains in the stomach, sickness and all looseness of the bowels is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry.

Mr. T. T. Allard, Parry Sound, Ont., writes: "In the fall of 1914 I was working on the new 'Chiclet Gum' factory, on Carlaw Ave., in Toronto, when I had a violent attack of diarrhoea, owing, I think to the change of water. One of the foremen advised me to get a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, which I did, with the result that I hadn't taken it all before I was completely cured."

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Wild Strawberry has been a national remedy for the past 72 years, and is sold by medicine dealers everywhere at 35c, a bottle. Don't let anyone palm off a substitute on you. When you pay your money for the genuine, you've a right to get it. Put up only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Keep Your Eye Open for the Big Bicycle Event on Dollar Day, at Bank's Garage, 312 Charlotte Street. Just know that we have a good thing, and get ready to loosen up.

Will be Missed by a Large Circle of Friends.

On Tuesday morning the remains of the late Mr. David O'Grady, who died at his home in Douro Sunday evening last at nine o'clock, were laid at rest in St. Joseph's Cemetery.

He leaves to mourn his loss his sorrowing wife, four daughters and two sons, Mrs. Barth Condon, Douro, Mrs. Jeremiah O'Connor, Campbellford, Mrs. T. Raymond, Brampton, and Miss Marguerite at home, James of Wash., Patrick at home and one brother William of Sag. Mich.,

WAS STRUCK BY A TRAIN.

LINDSAY, Aug. 15.—James Smith, a resident of the South Ward, west of the Grand Trunk roundhouse, met death Tuesday, when he was struck by an engine in the yard and almost instantly killed. The deceased, who is 62 years of age, was walking on the tracks at the time, and being hard of hearing, it is assumed that he failed to hear the approaching engine.

Mr. William J. Smith, 513 Albert Street, Peterborough, is a son of the deceased.

STILL CONSERVE, WARNS MR. CLYNES.

No Guarantee of Permanent Food, and Economy Helps Shipping.

LONDON, Aug. 15.—Food Controller Clynes informed newspapermen to-day that the existing supplies of food in the British Isles, whether home-grown or imported, ought not to be taken by the people as a guarantee of absolute permanent security. Economy of every kind was so direct a contribution to shipping resources, he pointed out, that waste or even failure to make sacrifices was at best a thoughtless offence against the national safety. The food difficulties of the world, Mr. Clynes said, were increasing, despite every effort to avoid them, and Great Britain could not altogether escape some share herself.

The yield of the British harvest this year, Mr. Clynes remarked, would be a disappointment to Germany.

Voice of The People

To the Editor of the Examiner:—
Dear Sir,—

In order to give our citizens the benefit of the Chautauqua series of lectures and entertainments, twenty-one business men of the city guaranteed $1200. This money must be in the hands af the Chautauqua people by noon to-morrow; othewise the by noon to-morrow; otherwise the twenty-one men will be liable on their guarnatee .To make them safe 600 tickets must be sold by Friday noon. Considering the sacrifice of time and energy on the part of some of our big-hearted citizens to make the Chautauqua a success (to say nothing of the guarante in money) it is the least we can do to buy a ticket if we can possibly afford it. They are on sale at Oak Hall, Madill's, Warne's, Kent's, Campbell and Best's and other places and I appeal to Peterborough people to go and buy. Peterboro too has the repuattion of always making good. Keep that reputation up.

Yours truly,
CITIZEN.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Here are a few thoughts of the proletariat for Mr. Burnham to get a line on re Chinese and cheap foreign labour. Are we going back to the days of slavery? Is the government to be permitted to draw on the over-stocked (500 million) Oriental labour markets, as from a great pen of slavery. Men to be sacrificed to the wiles of the modern capitalists, under the cloak of patriotism. Dr. Samuel Johnston very truly said, 'The last resort of a scoundrel is his declaration of patriotism.' This Chinese labour, or any other importation of cheap labour, is nothing more than exploitation of labour interests.

The statement, will you shut out cheap food and starve the poor, is truly a capitalist suggestion, viewing things from their own narrow sphere of selfishness. The working people of Canada do not object to paying the true value of any article, let it be food of utensil, and if the producers of wealth, that is the working classes, get proper value for their labour and are not exploited by those who wish to bring in cheap foreign labour, we will not kick. The importation of cheap foreign labour is not good in war time or any other time. We do not want cheap manufactured goods, or cheap agricultural products, at the expense of flesh and blood, putting the dollar before the men. People of this British Dominion now fighting for freedom and democracy, fighting for the emancipation of the working classes, is never going to be party to the importation of slaves, to bring about our own ruin, to weaken our organizations. The producers now start to progress along lines where the capitalist has been obliged to leave off. The past history of labour has indeed been a tragedy, but now labour has jumped from being a mere commodity, to human power, and in this fact, capitalists, and capitalist governments can foreshadow their doom.

True, we cannot be out of work and pay for things, but let the foreign labourer be out of work in his own country, instead of in the Dominion of Canada. The antagonism between exploiters and exploited becomes more intense, and as soon as the working classes control the nation economically and politically it inaugurates a system of collective production, in which the producers control their means of life and remove all obstacles to full human development. Capital, while trying to abuse, weaken, and degrade labour, are being led by a development brought about by themselves, which they now cannot control. A development that is taking the ground from under their feet. Let them stop the wheels of industry if they can.

This is not against the government, but for the government.

Proletarian.

Editor, Examiner:—I have just returned from a trip, which included St. Catharines, Simcoe, Galt, Goderich and Wingham, and I feel that I should let our own citizens know that in each of these places I heard the greatest praise of the Chautauqua lectures and entertainments. Different people said to me that they had no idea that every thing was going to be so hizh class, and others mentioned special the wonderful Junior Chautauqua meetings for children every morning. The lecturers particularly spoken of were Dr. F. W. Davidson, Colonel Bain and Dr. Russell Conwell. I also heard enthusiastic comments on the work of the Royal Dragoons, the Tschaekowsky Quartette, the Ben Greet Players and others of the artists. I strongly urge my fellow citizens to take advantage of this opportunity to attend the Chautauqua series for themselves and their children.

Yours truly,
Clinton E. Smith.

COAL SITUATION IS GRAVE, SAYS WILSON

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15. — Coal miners and operators are called upon in a proclamation by President Wilson to give their maximum effort to the production of coal to the end that threatened shortage next winter may be avoided. The President asks the miners particularly to work full time and urges those who are essential to the industry to accept deferred classification in the draft.

'The existing scarcity of coal," said the proclamation, "is creating a grave danger—in fact the most serious which confronts us, and calls for prompt and vigorous action on the part of both operators and miners. Without an adequate supply our war programme will be retarded; the effectiveness of our fighting forces in France will be lessened; the lives of our soldiers will be unnecessarily endangered and their hardships increased and there will be much suffering in many homes throughout the country during the coming winter.

THE WELSH QUARTET

THE WELSH QUARTET.

Beginning as choir boys in the Old Country, trained with the greatest care, gold medalists in many contests in England, Wales, France and the United States, with perfect blending of voice, in the best of music, with popular encores, costermonger imitations and promiscuous interpretations the Welsh Quartet will open Chautauqua Week with two programs that bring delight to all.

In Peterborough during the week of August 16th to 22nd.

CHAUTAUQUA NEWS

The five thousandth delivery of Dr. Russel H. Conwell's "Acres of Diamonds," was heard on May 21st, 1914, at Philadelphia. How many times it has been delivered since is not recorded, but Peterborough people will have an opportunity of hearing this world famous orator, by attending the Chautauqua on the evening of the sixth day.

Dr. Conwell is easily the most popular lecturer in the world, and while his personal popularity keeps him in constant demand, he has been secured for this Chautauqua at Peterborough.

So much esteemed is this famous lecture that it has been translated into eight foreign languages, to enable it to be circulated in print in as many countries?

At the evening of the third day, Col. George W. Bain will deliver his lecture, "If I Could Live Life Over." The committee has been wise in securing this famous American for Peterborough. His eloquence is such that he has been called the John B. Gough of to-day. One admirer, finding words to express his appreciation, said that 'behind his silver tongue is a heart of gold, while his wit and wisdom are diamonds in their brilliancy." His lecture is one that sums up in wit and wisdom the rich experience of a most successful career. It will prove invaluable to the young, inspiring to those in middle life, and a rare treat for all.

The unfortunate accident to Father J. P. McCorry, who was to deliver his famous and beautifully illustrated lecture, "The Story Beautiful," has necessitated his withdrawal from the programme. He is in Chicago, for treatment, at present. His place will be taken by Dr. Frank Bohn, author, investigator and lecturer. Perfectly at home on the platform, Dr. Bohn is an interpreter of life and an advocate of the saving power of knowledge in our present position. He is a scholarly specialist in social history of the United States in the last generation. And he has gained his experience in helping to solve the greatest problems that have come before the people in the last ten years.

Buy your tickets now. Remember that the series of addresses and the wealth of entertainment begin on Friday, 16th. That is to-morrow. The friends who have had the grit and enterprise to bring the Chautauqua to Peterborough will be heartened by your support that can best be shown in the tangible way of your taking tickets. $2.00 will admit to all and everything. Get a programme, and you will be at once convinced.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

SPORTING COMMENT

The fate of the Juarez race track recalls what happened years ago to one in New Orleans. Sentimental writers say that it is now merely a monument to a one-time successful sporting enterprise, for it is now a big wheat field. What was once a flourishing track in the Crescent City is a graveyard and has many a monument on it.

The financial flivver that the Fulton-Dempsey fight proved to be is just one evidence that the days of the inflated purses are things of the past. When the Frawley law first came into being the St. Nicholas Rink was an ideal spot, and was one of the few really legitimate places in the city where bouts might be conducted. When Sam Austin, the veteran referee and sporting editor of the Police Gazette, who was associated with Cornelius Fellowes in running it, was asked why he did not stage some boxing matches in the off season, he remarked that he was too wise a bird. He said the fighters would soon own the club, and he predicted that it would not be long before they killed the goose that laid the golden eggs for them.

How would you like to be doing a patriotic duty by working in an Alabama shipyard as a timekeeper and drawing $250 a month salary? Charley Grimm, first baseman of the St. Louis Cardinals, felt it his duty to Uncle Sam to give up baseball for this arduous task.

Time flies, but some records still stand. It is twenty-eight years ago this month since old Cy Young first broke into the major leagues, and he lasted twenty-two years before he retired to his farm. He pitched three no hit games in his career, the first in 1897 and the last in 1908, a period during which scores of stars had twinkled and gone out. Another great record he made in 1904 was to pitch twenty-three consecutive innings of hitless ball and the successive retirement of sixty-eight batters. He once pitched forty-five consecutive innings without being scored on, or five full games.

The national A. A. U. track and field championships should be really national in every respect and not localized in one vicinity. The Chicago A. A. did a very sportsmanlike bit of work in donating a fund of between $9,000 and $10,000 to defray the expenses of the visiting athletes and to entertain the officials. The affair will mark the dedication of the $100,000 athletic field at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station near Chicago, and it will be the first time that the affair has ever been held on a military reservation or where there was a chance to have the 440 yard dash on a straightaway track.

James W. Jump, of Los Angeles, recently established a record for catching a blue fin tuna on light tackle. It weighed 80 3-4 pounds. The fish got the jump on Jump and fought for four and a half hours before Jump got the jump on the fish. The best previous record was made five years ago by R. Rochester, Jr., of Los Angeles. His fish weighed 77 3-4 pounds.

Every day you hear of trap shooting records being broken but you can't convince old timers that there is any one to-day who could class with Captain Bogardus or Dr. Carver. Forty years ago in the old Gilmore Gardens in this city, shooting against time, Captain Bogardus broke 5,000 glass balls in 373m. 45s. In a match in London, England, in the early eighties, Dr. Carver and a Mr. Scott shot at 9,750 glass balls. Dr Carver missed only 13 and his opponent 15. In the last 950 Dr. Carver missed only 3 and Mr. Scott only 3. The latter had one run of 700 straight. Some shooting.

The new veils are bordered with narrow fur.

Mathewson Having His Own Troubles

Not so many moons ago pennant contenders, but now fighting to hold a place at the bottom of the first division, the Cincinnati players seem to have soured on themselves and their lot and are in the midst of a revolution. To cap the climax of a series of rather untoward incidents Matty this week suspended Hal Chase indefinitely. Matty announced that his temperamental first baseman had been guilty of indifferent playing and that until he believed Chase had rid himself of that indifference he would decorate the bench.

Matty is certainly having his own troubles. Some weeks ago a cry arose in Redland that Matty was not fit to manage the club. It was charged that he had failed to install into the players a hustling spirit, and that the Reds were ignorant of the hit and run and too often victims of such tactics. "Give us a new manager while there still is hope," the godsakers of Cincinnati yelped, but Matty remained and his troubles multiplied. His pitchers went bad, Toney, who had been counted on to lead the staff, refused to get into condition, and proved a rank failure, with the result that the mountain of beef was consigned to the Giants. Mike Regan went home after his splendid game against the Dodgers last Monday. To add to Matty's difficulties some of the players began to call each other hard names. Last Monday Lee Magee and Earl Neale went at each other and on Tuesday Magee was unable to play against the Giants. It's a sad mess for Matty and the fans are sorry for him.

Chase's conduct is nothing new. Fans are familiar with the temperamental fits of the first baseman. They had enough of them when Hal was with the Yankees. Chase proved a remarkable surprise last season, when he was among the topnotchers of the league. Cincinnati looked for just as good work from him this year, but he never remained in the line-up for long. Injuries forced him out for protracted periods. There was a suspicion that Chase played himself along rather too carefully and did not care to play when he might have done so.

CANADA "SHOWS" UNCLE SAM HOW.

New York, Aug. 15.—Not yet willing to concede that the national game of the United States should be classed as non-essential, The New York Sun publishes the following by way of contrast:

"Baseball has been declared 'non-essential' in the United States and the game may not be revived for the entertainment of the public until after the war. But baseball still is booming in Canada. Toronto, which has remained loyal to the sport ever since the struggle with the Kaiser started four years ago, is turning out large crowds. The Toronto team, led by aDn Howley, is leading the new league and probably will win another championship. The city of Hamilton recently took over the franchise of the Syracuse Club in the new league, the patronage of the Salt City having dwindled to nothing.

"When Canada's part in the war is considered, the popularitp of the game in Toronto, Hamilton, and other Canadian cities is surprising. Perhaps baseball will be restored in this country next year, when Uncle Sam has had some study of the situation."

COLLINS TO ENLIST.

Cleveland, August 15.—Eddie Collins, the second baseman for the Chicago Americans, will play his last game at Boston on Thursday, leaving that night for Philadelphia, where he will join the marines, he announced to-day.

Eddie Collins was purchased from the Philadelphia Americans for $50,000 and in addition to getting $10,000 as a bonus from President Comiskey, his contract called for $15,000 a year. He is 30 years old, married, and has two children.

TORONTO, Aug. 15.—It has been decided by the Militia authorities at Ottawa that no men liable for service under the Military Service Act in Class I will be accepted for enlistment in the Siberian expeditionary force that is now being raised in Toronto. Only returned soldiers who are physically fit and others not within Class I will be accepted. The decision not to enroll draftees was decided yesterday by Ottawa, but no explanation of the change is given. Men wishing to report for this expedition can be medically examined at the Toronto mobilization centre, and if accepted will be attached to the Canadian Garrison Regiment for training purposes. No N.C.O.'s will be appointed at present and appointments will be made on merit.

CLOSES ICE CREAMERIES BUT NOT RESTAURANTS

Hamilton Makes a Distinction That Peterboro Found an Obstacle

HAMILTON, Aug. 15.—At last the ice cream dealers know just where they stand with the Lord's day act, as it is to be interpreted and applied by the local police. Chief Whatley announced this morning that he had instructed the sergeants to notify all ice cream dealers to close their shops on Sunday.

"Under what penalty?" the chief was asked.

"Those who don't comply with the order will be summoned to court," replied the chief, who added: "Of course, that does not apply to bona-fide restaurants. We have already succeeded in having the drug stores shut off the sale of ice cream on Sundays."

BARN BURNED TO THE GROUND.

TWO HEAD OF HORSES INCLUDED IN THE LOSS.

Johnston Bros., of Hillhead, South Ops, suffered a heavy loss on Tuesday night, when a bolt of lightning struck their barn, burning it to the ground. By quick work, Messrs. James and Walter Johnson were able to save part of the stock, including a fine bunch of fat hogs, but two horses, two head of cattle, and a quantity of alsike and barley, were consumed by the flames.

The Johnston farm is situated only a couple of miles from the Roach property, where a barn was burned during the electrical storm of a couple of weeks ago. Although partially protected by insurance, Johnston brothers have suffered heavily.

MAY CALL HER "HONEY" PUTS BAN ON "HUN."

KINGSTON, Aug. 1.—The name "Hun" may be a "lovey-dovey" name in times of peace, but not so in times of war. You may call the girls "honey" but don't call them "Hun."

The war had a direct bearing on a case which came before Magistrate Farrell in the Police Court. A well-dressed young man stood accused of the non-support of his wife. Husband and wife stood side by side and Magistrate Farrell, after getting the particulars of the case, enlarged it for a week, in order that the two might reach a satisfactory settlement.

From what can be learned it appears that the entire trouble between the two, who were married some time ago in Buffalo, N.Y., is the fact that the wife is a German, while the husband is British.

This has made things very disagreeable. The wife does not care to be referred to as "Hun" and one things led to another till the charge of non-support came as the climax. However, the wife has a snug bank account, and, it is said, would not suffer if her hubby did fail to look after her wants.

IMPRESSED THE JAPANESE.

Gratified Over the Allied Successes in France.

LONDON, Aug. 15.—News of the Allied successes in France, says a despatch to the Times from Tokio under date of August 10, has profoundly impressed the Japanese, who do not conceal their gratification. The people are particularly impressed by the metamorphosis of the United States into a warlike nation that dares to help in breaking up militarism.

The newspapers believe that if the enemy is driven back in the West the German menace in the East will increase.

BIG ED KLEPFER HAS BEEN OVER THE TOP

Steve O'Neill, of Cleveland, has received another letter from Sergt. E. Klepfer, former Indian and Rochester pitcher. A portion follows:

"Well, Steve, I have been over the top and have come back without being hit. I was a member of a scouting squad.

"Steve, you know how it feels when you are up at the bat and Walter Johnson buzzes one of his fast ones by your ears. Well, that's how it feels when the Huns are trying to pick you off. It's sure a great sensation—that of being fired at by someone you know means it."

Ed. mentioned that he had not seen First Baseman Joe Harris since he reached France.

OBITUARY

BABY DUNNETT.

The funeral took place this morning to Little Lake cemetery of Baby Dunnett, infant child of Mr. and Mrs. John Dunnett, Mark street.

CLARA J. FITZGERALD.

The death occurred on Saturday, August 10th, of Clara J. Fitzgerald, beloved wife of Henry M. Carver, aged 60 years. The deceased was born in Smith township, and was united in marriage to Mr. Carver 40 years ago, but had resided in Seneca township, near Caledonia, for many years. She had been in poor health since last March, and death was due to hardening of the arteries and a paralytic stroke, and she passed peacefully away to rest.
She was a kind and affectionate mother to her children and eight grandchildren, and she will be greatly missed by them all. She leaves to mourn her loss, her husband, and three children: Mrs. Frank Ward, of Waterford; Mrs. Martin Whaley, and Mr. Bruce Carver, Caledonia.
The funeral took place on Tuesday to Unity church, where a service was held and was largely attended by friends and neighbours by whom she was highly respected.
Mr. Osway Carver and Mr. S. D. Carver, and Mrs. Alton Wood and Mrs. James Thompson attended the funeral.

New Styles Reduce Pockets and Remove Cuffs From Trousers, Declares C. E. Wry

Secretary of Clothiers' Association Says Other Features Also Will be Eliminated at Request of Government.

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.—Those Beau Brummels who shudder to think of trousers without cuffs and coats without match and handkerchief pockets, have a full fledged chill coming to them if they only knew it. C. E. Wry, secretary of the National Retail Clothiers' Association, says that hereafter makers will not put those finishing touches to suits, regardless of the purchasers' wishes.
Mr. Wry, who is at the McAlpin Hotel, preparing for the convention of the association that is to begin there, and which will draw one thousand retail dealers from all parts of the United States, said their government had made the request.
"I guess the gay young chaps now will have to carry their 'kerchiefs in their sleeves," he said, smilingly, "and as for matches—I guess they may be forced to stop their daring habits, because there are to be no snug little pockets for safekeeping of them."

To Regulate Prices.

Mr. Wry said the retail clothiers were going through a period of extreme peril just now from a financial standpoint. Many retailers, he said, were selling articles of wear at a figure far below what they could be replaced for if they were replaced at this time.
He said that while there had been an increase of almost thirty-three and one-third per cent. in the price of men's clothing up to this time, he did not expect higher prices after this fall, because there was going to be a government ruling that would regulate the price of woollens and other materials to the retailers.

London Paper Says Lord Reading Will Discuss Plan With Government.

NEWS TO WASHINGTON.

NEVER HEARD OF IT THERE — AMBASSADOR TO ARRANGE ALLIED FINANCES.

London, August 14.—According to the Evening News, Lord Reading, the British Ambassador to the United States, who is here on a visit, will discuss with Premier Lloyd George and Arthur J. Balfour, Minister of Foreign Affairs, certain proposals for closer Anglo-American co-operation both during the war and afterwards. The newspaper states that the proposals involve an offensive and defensive alliance, in which the co-operation of other democratic nations will be welcomed.
Lord Reading's visit, however, has mainly to do with certain financial readjustments connected with the assumption by the United States of responsibility for loans to allied nations heretofore borne by Great Britain, the Evening News says, and with the conclusion of negotiations for certain further loans in which the United States, Great Britain and France are to participate.

NEWS TO WASHINGTON.

Washington, Aug. 14.—It was stated authoritatively to-day that the subject of a British-American offensive and defensive alliance never has been discussed or even suggested. The understanding here is that Lord Reading's visit to London is to report personally upon his work in the United States and to acquaint himself fully with developments at home.

SOLDIER-BIGAMIST GOES TO KINGSTON.

Second Wife Threw Herself Into St. Lawrence and Was Drowned.

BROCKVILLE, Aug. 14.—Joseph Ernest Jewett, who twice left Canada with the expeditionary forces and served in the present war, returning wounded in July, was sentenced by Judge Reynolds to-day to five years in Kingston Penitentiary after pleading guilty last week to bigamously marrying Stella E. Morgan, who, on learning that Jewett had a wife and child in Bristol, England, threw herself in the St. Lawrence and was drowned thirty-six hours after the marriage. Jewett pleaded guilty shortly after his arrest last week, and to-day had nothing to say why the sentence should not be pronounced. The body of Mrs. Jewett was found last Saturday.

It is to be hoped that the meek will inherit the earth before the other fellow gets through with it.

British Break All Records In Wheat Production

Returning Traveller Declares Nation Has Ploughed Up 2,400,000 Acres Since 1916—Everybody in Great Britain is Working to the One End.

THE WOMEN ARE DOING NOBLY

NEW YORK, Aug. 16. — Great Britain has ploughed up all its grass lands and is gathering the biggest wheat crop in the history of the nation, according to C. H. Burlingame, managing director of the International Harvesting Machine Company in London, who was a passenger on board a British steamship that arrived at an Atlantic port yesterday from a British port.

"The food production scheme is materializing wonderfully in Great Britain," said Mr. Burlingame. "The British have been ploughing up all their grass land, using tractors and tractor ploughs, and up to now they have ploughed 2,400,000 acres since 1916. The result is that they will have one of the finest and biggest wheat crops, as well as other crops, that they have had in Great Britain in years.

"Everybody in Great Britain is working to the one end, that is, the production of food from the ground. The women have done nobly in this direction. They have stood by the men in the fields or taken the places of the men who had previously gone to the war or to the munition factories. All in Great Britain are working together, Americans as well as British."

Also representing the International Harvesting Company, but in a different field and under much more trying circumstances, was Parke Randall, of Fock Falls, Ill., who was manager of the company's plant at Lille, France, when war broke out. The plant was closed down as soon as hostilities began within the Belgian frontier, and when the Huns finally reached Lille Mr. Randall was still guarding the closed plant, to see that the company's rights would not be violated.

A SI GULAR PHENOME'O".

Making Water Boil Furiously While It Is Still Cool.

At high altitudes, such as mountain tops, water boils at a temperature lower than that required in the lowlands (212 d grees F.). This difference is due to the difference i atmospheric pressure, which, as experiments show, d creases in proportion to the distance from the earth.

Although it is not possible t take water up a few score miles int the air, the essential condition (low atmospheric pressure) can be secured in the laboratory by the use of an exhaust pump or suction pump. By withdrawing most of the air above water inclosed in an air-tight tank a partial vacuum—another na ne for low atmospheric pressure —is created, under which circumstances the water exh.bits the singular phenomenon of boiling furiously while still cool.

There is a simpler way to decrease the air pressure than by pumping the air away, for which only a hard glass flask and a tight-fitting rubber stopper are necessary.

Fill the flask half full of water and apply heat. After the water has boiled for a minute or so and the steam has driven out all the air, let the heat be turned off and the stopper immediately inserted into the mouth of the flask. Then the flask contains nothing but water and steam. If the steam be condensed a partial vacuum will be created, because no air can be admitted to take the place of the condensed steam; then the water under the reduced pressure of a partial vacuum will begin to boil.

To condense the steam it is only necessary to cool the flask. Accordingly, if cold water be poured over the flask of hot water and steam, the steam will condense rapidly and the water will boil with equal rapidity to supply steam to fill the space left empty by the steam just condensed, until an equilibrium between temperature and pressure is reached.

Upon every addition of cold water, provided the flask is air tight, the same result is obtained, until finally the water inside the flask has cooled to the same temperature as that of the water used to cool it.

Some idea of the tremendous reduction of pressure that takes place within the flask may be obtained by observing the way in which tin cans or defective flasks crumple under this treatment, or by the way the stopper is often drawn into the flask.

Ban Spread of Rumors.

The Paris Prefect of Police has decided to take drastic measures to stop unthinking chatter in public places and the spreading of alarmist reports and defeatist opinions. A warning issued the other day points out that henceforth any person, no matter how respectable he may be, will be arrested and taken to the nearest police station if he forgets himself to the extent of talking not wisely but too well.

The warning had hardly been posted when the round-up began to show results. Boulevardiers of all sorts were brought before the local commissaries to explain their individual acts of indiscretion. There were some whose sole offence, according to their explanations, was that they had merely said that they knew a friend whose concierge had been told by the post-carrier that on the day after tomorrow the Gothas would surely carry out a terrible raid on Paris.

Upper Stoney Lake Campers Held Successful Regatta

Ideal Weather Favoured the Event —A Good Programme Was Provided.

THE PRIZE-WINNERS

CROWE'S LANDING, Aug. 14. — The blue sky, sparkling air and fresh breeze from the north-west, following on last night's thunder storm, which was the climax to the recent heat wave, combined to provide delightful weather conditions for the annual regatta of the Upper Stoney Campers' and Cottagers' Association, held this afternoon on the splendid course off Crowe's Landing. There was a large attendance of spectators and the whole programme was carried out without a hitch. There was plenty of competition in the different events and although war conditions rendered it necessary that the "men's" races should be largely won by youngsters, the programme was none the less enjoyable on that account.

Turner Chapman carried off the special prize, a wrist watch, for the Upper Stoney Lake boy to win the most points in the afternoon's event. He won two firsts, two seconds and one third.

The tilting, greasy pole and caching the duck events provided lots of amusement for the crowd. Young V. Finlay captured the duck after the poor bird had been chased around by a score of young swimmers. The prize was afterwards auitioned off for the Red Cross and was purchased for $15.00.

WALKERVILLE NEEDS FIVE HUNDRED HOUSES.

Mayor Asks Finance Committee To Report on Government Scheme.

WINDSOR, Aug. 14. — Impressed with the possibilities of the Ontario Government's plan to loan money at 5 per cent. to municipalities to build homes for workmen, Mayor Hoare of Walkerville has instructed the Civic Finance Committee to report on the plan at the next Council meeting. According to R. A. Holland, a former member of the Council, there is a shortage of 500 houses in the town. This condition, it is declared, is retarding the industrial growth of the town.

WINDSOR'S IMMORAL BATHING HABITS.

Scoring conditions at Windsor's civic swimming pool at the foot of Bridge Avenue, Sandwich West, Dr. U. J. Durocher, medical health officer for the last named municipality, declares that he will close the beach in five days unless the city engages a caretaker and provides proper dressing rooms. Dr. Durocher charges that gross immorality including "September Morn" parades along the beach, are too common. Young men and women use the same dressing rooms at times, the doctor says.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING offers the manufacturer the best possible way to eliminate waste circulation, for it enables him to advertise where he has and can get distribution. To sell goods profitably depends largely on ability to reach the maximum number of people at the minimum cost.

Newspaper advertising is the quickest and surest means of getting retail distribution. It shows the retailer that a wide spread demand is being created.

The dealer is always ready to sell products that sell easy. He is a reader and an advertiser of the daily newspaper, and is sold on newspaper advertising, for he knows what it will do.

You prove to the retailer you are doing the utmost to help create a demand for him; this is real distribution. You can expand at will, adding steadily to your markets making each a permanent stronghold.

The Woman Who Changed

By JANE PHELPS

THE NEW LIFE

CHAPTER CXLV

The days passed so quickly that when mother, on the day baby was a month old, told me that she must go home, I could scarcely realize she had been with me so long.

We had named our boy "Kenneth Milner Howard." The "Kenneth" after George's father, and the "Milner" for my entire family— so my husband said. My brothers were delighted, and each wrote me such gay letters.

"It would have been ridiculous, had the baby been a girl," Philip said, in his joking way, "with three uncles to teach him all a boy needs to know."

"I am glad he is a boy," mother said. "George is so pleased. He is planning already where he shall be educated."

Evelyn came over every day, usually bringing little Helen. We planned what good times we would have with our babies as they grew older. One thing, only, saddened me in connection with my boy; and that was that Mrs. Sexton never could see him. It was strange, how often I thought of her and of the things she had told me. In so many ways had advised me as even my own mother could not; for, she lived all her life in a different environment—one nearer my own, now that I was married to a successful man of the world. I had repeated to mother many things she had told me, and mother quite agreed that she had done a great deal for me.

"How you could have disliked her at first, even seems strange, in view of what you tell me," mother said, after we had talked of Mrs. Sexton's last days.

YOUNG AND INEXPERIENCED

"I resented her."

"That was because you were so young."

"Yes, and inexperienced. I think she understood before she died. I vohiotte love to think she did.

"I am sure she did," mother replied, "and, dear, I want you to remember all she told you. She was so well fitted to direct you rightly. She knew so well just what you would need in this large town life that I know nothing about. Then, too, I know from what you have told me that she was a good woman. Many people have the idea that society women are frivolous and are not particularly good, as we use the word. But I know that it is a mistake. There are, there must be, many such women as Mrs. Sexton in society. They have a place to fill in the world, and if they fill their lives with kindness and thoughtful acts, their social duties do not make them less spiritual than the women who have no such tax upon them. I haven't expressed myself very well, dear; but I mean to make you understand that you can be the kind of a wife George needs, and yet be as good a woman as if you were living back home.

"I know what you mean, mother. I can be like Mrs. Babcock."

"Yes. And there must be many such women."

"Not many so sweet and kind, I am afraid." But mother only smiled.

TOO BUSY TO BE VERY LONELY

I missed mother dreadfully, but I was too busy to be very lonely. It doesn't seem possible that one small bit of humanity can take up so much time, but I really was busy every moment of the day. Of course I spent a good deal of time just holding him. Mother said I would spoil him. But he was my own baby, and if I wanted to pet him and hold him, I was going to! When I told her so, she laughed and replied:

"All right dear! I always felt that way, too. But it will make it harder for you to take care of him, if you humor him too much."

"I won't allow her to spoil the youngster too much," George broke in, "I must see that she doesn't make herself ill."

Whenever George said anything like that, it meant as much as a caress would mean from some men. It had taken me a long time to learn that fact; and I had scarcely become accustomed, even yet ,to doing without the petting I saw given to Evelyn and to other wives whose husbands where more demonstrative.

I don't think undemonstrative people realize how those who are naturally affectionate feel about such things. A kiss, a caress, means so much to them. Whenever I saw Evelyn and Kurts together, I always felt sort of neglected, and, foolish as it may sound, like crying. Kurts scarcely could pass her without giving her a little loving touch, or a kiss.

But I had especially after baby came, great consideration. George was kind, thoughtful, and anxious that I shouldn't overdo in any way. But often I thought I would rather he would be more affectionate, and not quite so considerate.

High Price for Calf.

A Milwaukee, Wis., despatch states that Champion Sylvia Johanna, a seven-months-old calf, bred by A. C. Hardy at his Avondale Farm, near Brockville, Ont., sold by auction at the Moyer Holstein sale for $106,000. This young bull is entitled to the distinction of being the highest priced animal in the world, and the figure received for him constitutes a double world's record, no sum even approximating that netted by Champion Sylvia Johanna having previously been paid for an animal. The dam of Champion Sylvia Johanna is the world's record cow for milk production, May Echo Sylvia, and his sire is King Echo Sylvia Johanna, whose dam is a twice 37-pound cow and whose sire is in turn a son of May Echo Sylvia. Mr. Hardy retains the dams of these animals as foundation cows and these notable sires have been born, bred and raised at Avondale Farm.

Old Oak at Windsor Goes.

Canadian Foresters have felled the famous tree which stood in front of Windsor Castle, known as William the Conqueror's oak. The tree was reputed to be a favorite of the Norman Duke, who protected it from deer. Old manuscripts show the oak tree existed in the year 900. Latterly the tree became unsightly, and was very rotten. After ineffectual attempts to have it reinforced with cement, the King ordered its removal.

The timber is very fine grain and color. One slab is used for a mantel-piece in the small replica of a Canadian log cabin built by the Canadians in Windsor Park as a tearoom for the King. A number of souvenirs have been made of the wood. One is a carved plaque of Windsor Castle background and Indian's head.

A Giant Spider.

A spider native to Trinidad has a body as large as a penny, and eight legs which spread themselves out in a circumference the size of a cheese plate. For months at a time these spiders, husband and wife, will live irreproachably together in a chosen corner of a cupboard or ceiling where they stay during the hours of daylight, the wife clasping her white egg-case to her body by her forelegs. After dark, when they hunt, they run all over the house, for they spin no web, but get their living by catching cockroaches by sheer fleetness of foot. They are seldom disturbed or killed, partly because it is unlucky to kill any spider, partly because of their very considerable running powers, and finally because more spiders mean fewer cockroaches.

A Change.

Human beings are as prone to hero worship as ever they were, but heroes aren't what they used to be.

WEALTHY LOAFERS.

Toronto Police Say That Retired Men Are Now Working.

What Toronto's retired gentlemen are doing individually to comply with the order-in-Council requiring every male under the age of sixty years to have a job is a police secret. Collectively, however, the police say, these men are getting back into harness, most of them at their old occupation.

There is no police record of just how many wealthy men have been prodded into jobs by the Police Department, but an official estimate says about one hundred. With the police the male unemployed are divided sharply into two classes—the wealthy and the loafers. Of the former there has been just one prosecution in the Police Court. It was a broker, and there was a little more involved than a charge of unemployment. Of the latter class, however, twenty-five faced the magistrate, half of whom the police believe are now earning instead of begging a living. No less than seven are, or are supposed to be, out hunting jobs with which to make a showing when they appear before the magistrate again. And there are five or six doing six months at the jail farm, in default of a $50 fine.

The lure of the land is strong with the wealthy unemployed. At least a score of them have notified headquarters that their particular job from now till the end of the war will keep them on a brother's or son's farm, where only the county constable will have supervision over the farm.

There are a dozen that the police recall have decided to open real estate offices. Some retired contractors have taken supervisory jobs with their sons to whom the business has been handed over. Two decided that in their leisure years they learned enough about motor cars to open garages. One retired business man, whose income is estimated at $5,000 a year, has a clerkship in a trust concern which nets him $20 a week. A designer has gone back to his trade, and a retired manufacturer has taken over the office management for his son.

Enforcement of the order-in-Council rests entirely with the police force. The loafers are looked after by the police constables on the beat, and are picked up here, there, and everywhere. Headquarters has been notifying the first class by gentle letters that they must seek work. Upon the police inspectors rests some responsibility to ferret out and know the eligibles so that they can be notified.

So far, the police say, they have not had the least difficulty in getting those living on incomes to get work. They have received the order so good-naturedly that it is not anticipated that there will be any prosecutions. Of course, sufficient time has not elapsed since the order to check up usefulness or uselessness of the employment they secure, but, according to the police, that will come later.

A New London Drink.

An American in a public bar in London was mystified recently when a customer entered and sang out: "1,035 hop, please." At first the man from the States believed the newcomer was seeking to telephone, but the bar maid put out a drink, the thirsty one drank and paid for it and then left without saying another word. Of course, American inquisitiveness had to be satisfied.

Investigation developed that the latest beer price order in England fixes the maximum price of beer at lower gravity than 1,036 at eight cents a pint and beer at gravity of from 1,036 to 1,042 at ten cents a pint.—Montreal Star.

GREATER SUPPLY OF BREADSTUFFS

British People Grow Enough For Forty Weeks.

SIR ARTHUR LEE SPEAKS

The United Kingdom Is Steadily Becoming More Self-Supporting and Will Want Aid to Carry Them Over Only Abont Three Months of the Year, Instead of Nine Months as Was the Case Before the War.

THE United Kingdom is within a measurable distance now of being self-supporting in the matter of breadstuffs.

Sir Arthur Lee, Director-General of Food Production, estimates that this year's harvest will give 40 weeks' supply, as compared with a little over 10 weeks' supply in 1916-1917, and 13 weeks' supply in 1917-1918.

Sir Arthur's estimate for this year is based on the assumption that the whole of the wheat and barley crops, one-fifth of the oats, and one-fourth of the potatoes (the surplus above normal consumption) could be made available for breadmaking.

SIR ARTHUR LEE.

The increase in the acreage under crops in England and Wales on April 27 is shown in the following table, based on an official census:

Crop.	Acres.	Inc. over 1916. Acres.	P.C.
Wheat	2,665,000	752,000	39
Barley	1,490,000	58,000	11
Oats	2,820,000	735,000	35
Rye, dredge corn, pulse	682,000	280,000	69
Potatoes	645,000	217,000	50
Total	8,302,000	2,042,000

The wheat acreage is the greatest since 1882; oats, 20 per cent. and potatoes 27 per cent. above previous records.

It is estimated that the increase in tillage in the United Kingdom will be well over 1,000,000 acres. The present condition of crops is very promising.

The total number of allotments is over 1,300,000.

Reckoned in tonnage, the net saving in shipping resulting from the increased production in corn and potatoes in England and Wales alone should amount in the coming year to 1,500,000 tons.

The figures quoted relate only to holdings of an acre and upwards, and take no account of allotments and gardens. The increase in allotments alone since 1916 is not less than 800,000 in England and Wales, or 140 per cent. The additional weight of foodstuffs produced by this expansion may be reckoned at not less than 800,000 tons above the normal.

Monument Premature.

Approaching Kut-el-Amara from the south by the river Tigris the first thing one sees nowadays is a tall obelisk. It stands on ground sacred to no people in this world but the British. It stands on the wide, shell-torn and deeply-trenched neck of land—base of the peninsula on which the town is built — where for 143 days the shattered remnant of a British army withstood a double siege of constant bombardment and slow staryation.

This obelisk was raised by the Turks to commemorate the surrender of Gen. Townshend and their victory over the British forces that had tried so long and so heroically to relieve him. To me it was an exclamation point to punctuate my own astonishment!

I saw it first in the wonderful lights of early evening—a tall white shaft in a half circling fringe of palm trees, lifting itself against a background of placid river, which lay in a short straight stretch to the north, reflecting the colors of the sunset.

Was ever anything quite so premature? It makes me realize, as nothing else could, how confident the Turks and the Germans were that they had the British in Mesopotamia permanently defeated. Defeated! It seems incredible that anyone could have imagined it. In the face of things as they have become, that obelisk seems to me to express a kind of whimpering entreaty, as though it felt itself strangely inappropriate and would get away if it could to follow its builders on the long trail of retreat to the north. It is a monument to monumental misconjecture, the ironic humor of it being unique and a thing in which Englishmen may now rejoice. — Saturday Evening Post.

GERMANS NOT WANTED.

All Teutonic Influences Expelled from Australia.

Germans, who completely controlled the mining and metal industries in Australia before the war and were able to embarrass Australia considerably by this control at the beginning of hostilities, have been completely deprived of their interests for the period of the war and forever after. This statement was made recently by William Morris Hughes, Prime Minister of Australia.

Defining further the Munroe Doctrine of Australia, the Prime Minister said that Australia wanted no more territory and was perfectly content for islands near Australia to remain in the hands of friendly powers. Speaking of the Dutch ownership of part of New Guinea and Dutch possessions near Australia, the Prime Minister said:

"We have had no quarrel with Holland in the past. But, if she becomes a mere mask for Germany, we want her there as little as we want Germany.

"As Britain will fight to the end to prevent Germany getting possession of the Channel ports, and France will fight to the end to prevent Germany from retaining Belgium, and keeping always a threat of a new invasion, so Australia will fight to the end against the holding of naval bases and points of attack against Australia. We want no more territory. France has New Caledonia in these waters, and we are glad of it and wish she had more. But the possession of islands within striking distance of us in unfriendly hands means that our country must always sleep with the sword half drawn."

After telling how the Germans, through owning stock in mining and metal companies and through having Germans as buying and selling agents and in other positions, controlled the trade, Mr. Hughes told of the measures taken to root German interests out once and for all in Australia. He added:

"There is no German now who has any interest of any sort or kind, nor will they be allowed when this war is over to hold any such interests, not though they be naturalized to the Nth degree. Having been caught once, we do not propose to be caught again."

Great prosperity had resulted to these industries through purging them of hostile influences, he said, so that they were not only now operating at the fullest capacity but had their output engaged for ten years to come. Australia will receive the most marked economic benefit for the future, he said, from driving out German interests and concentrating its industries in the hands of its own and friendly people. From the economic standpoint, he said, great advantages had already been produced in that Australia has established mills and industrial plants of all kinds for its raw material and was now the owner of the second greatest electrozinc plant in the world.

Through lack of shipping and through the diversion of coastwise vessels to war service, Australia had been forced to hoard wheat until its stores, he said, now amounted to 6,000,000 tons, waiting for shipping. Most of this was in good condition, he said, and would keep until ships were ready. Australia, he said, was now building steel and wooden ships and planning for a fleet of concrete ships. Part of the wheat is in sections where the climate is so dry that it has kept in perfect condition for three years in galvanized iron storehouses, while $25,000,000 has been spent on building concrete elevators in sections where the moisture would otherwise injure the grain. The greatest cause of loss of stored wheat, he said, had been weevils, and this problem has now been solved by entomologists employed by the Australian Government.

In spite of this huge overproduction of wheat, continued production has been encouraged, he said, by the Government, which has agreed to purchase all raw materials, including those for which there is now no present outlet. More than $600,000,000 worth of goods have thus been financed.

After recounting how Australia had sent more than 320,000 men into the field, which in proportion to population would be equivalent to an army of 8,000,000 from the United States, and lost 47,000 in dead, Mr. Hughes continued:

"The March offensive of the Germans resulted in a great rekindling of enthusiasm in Australia. Stories which had been circulated that America was sending plenty of men to the front and that there were reserve enough to last two years vanished like mist. We are increasing our quota and recruiting is going on at a rapid rate. The Chief Justice has been appointed to see how many men are wanted and we are raising them."

Killed "Black Fritz."

Pte. Amos D. Jordan is the boy who has the distinction of killing "Black Fritz," the famous German sniper. Pte. Jordan, whose home is in the United tSates, served overseas with the Canadian army. Joining the colors on April 23rd, 1916, and being discharged on account of wounds on November 3rd, 1916, he was for nine months in France with the Canadians. He was a little over sixteen years old at the time he joined the Canadian forces and his record with that army shown in his papers of discharge is a long one of heroic feats. While in the service of the Canadians he took part in the battles of Vimy Ridge, Ypres, Verdun, St. Mihiel, Dicybush and other engagements of minor importance.

A Lucky Hit

By GEORGE ELMER COBB

Silver Cliff had grown up from a mere frontier post after the placer gold diggings along a dried-up creek had been discovered. It did not take long to exhaust the surface deposits, however, and after two years the great dump heaps showed so little value, that only a few lazy Chinamen picked up less than a dollar's worth of tiny flakes and nuggets from a day's arduous labor.

The real glory of the town reached its zenith when true fissure mines were located up in the mountains. Hemp Dawson, prospector, speculator and lucky one, was first on the ground. The ore paid for shipment to the smelter, ten miles away, and he waxed rich and self important. He aspired to political preferment, but was not popular and his ambitions in that line were daunted. Then he built the finest residence in town and invited pretty Maizie Cole, daughter of the circuit judge, to become its mistress. Maizie graciously declined the honor, for she cared for only one man in the world. He was poor, he had his way to make, but Maizie had faith in him and Boyd Darrell had patience.

Darrell owned the claim next to that of Dawson. His was purely a pick and shovel proposition, for he had no capital. His only means of conveying the ore to the smelter was with a wagon and two horses. Some bi-weekly runs brought him in fifty dollars, some only ten, but the average was a living one, and,

"I've got something serious to tell you, Maizie," said Darrell to his sweetheart on his regular Saturday visit. "The Coronada has given out."

"Hemp Dawson's mine?"

"Yes, and he has taken up a claim over in the next county. Of course he has made lots of money, but the pay streak has proved only an under cropping and his old claim is worthless."

"And yours, Boyd?" asked Maizie anxiously.

"Shows a fine lode, as always. That goes for nothing, though."

"Why, what do you mean?" pressed Maizie, almost alarmed.

"Dawson's mine has always caught the dome drippings of the hill and had to be pumped out. Now that Dawson has stopped work, the water is filling in and it is seeping through to my mine. There is four feet of it now in every lateral fifty feet down. We will be flooded clear up to the first tunnel within a week, and as I have not the money to put in a pumping apparatus of course it is folly to think of going ahead."

That afternoon Ross drove Maizie over to the mine and Maizie looked doleful enough when she observed dismal verification of his statements. They were about to start for home when she noticed a heap of pretty greenish rubbish dumped from the diggings.

"What is that, Ross?" she inquired, her eye attracted by the almost silky sheen of the brittle lumps.

"Oh, refuse stuff," replied Ross carelessly.

"I would like a few lumps to border a flower bed," said Maizie, and Ross piled a quantity of the gleaming cinder-like substance into the wagon.

"I'll work out the surface dump," Ross decided, "until it runs too low grade. Then I'll have to strike out for a new field. We'll have to wait another year or two, Maizie. It's got to be a home, and all paid for, before there is any wedding, your father says."

Judge Cole came home one day and was busy for several hours moving a bed and some furniture to a room over the barn.

"A poor crippled fellow was brought before me for begging," he told his wife. "His name is Baylies and he has been a geologist. He can just get around on his crutches and I felt it would be a shame to send him to jail to herd in with all kinds of criminals. We will take care of him here till he gets able to go home to the East."

Baylies was made comfortable and became quite welcome about the place. He ate with the family, was a perfect mine of information and entertained his hosts not a little.

One day Baylies was hobbling about the garden when he came upon Maizie, gloved and sunbonneted, fringing a bed of pansies with the green bits of ore refuse from the mine.

"Why, where did you get this?" questioned Baylies, interestedly inspecting one of the fragments, and Maizie told him.

"If your friend, Mr. Darrell, had much of this stuff in sight he certainly has a treasure."

"What is it?" asked Maizie.

"Uranium—pitch blend, and these samples are the best grade I ever saw. The government is paying handsomely for the stuff. You see, it takes tons of it to make a single grain of radium. I wish I could see Mr. Darrell, and the mine."

Baylies did see him that evening, and the mine the next day. The excitement of Baylies was intense as he located enormous deposits of the uranium high up above the water-filled tunnels.

"You are a rich man, Mr. Darrell," advised the geologist.

"And a happy one," he added, as he viewed the radiant face of Maizie, who clung to the arm of her fiance and whispered in his ear:

"Oh, Ross! our ship of fortune has come in, at last!"

HE INSPIRES TERROR

MALATESTA IS THE MOST FEARED OF ALL ANARCHISTS.

Agitator Who Has a Finger In Nearly Every Pie In Europe Is the Scion of a Noble Italian House and Lives In an Obscure Street In London — Doesn't Believe In Assassination Methods.

Almost obscure in the hurly-burly of life are five and a half feet of gentle, polite, reticent man, smiling but unspeaking, thoughtful but approachable, at whose name the enthroned ones shudder and at whose appearance the police forces of the nations gather themselves for supreme efforts.

The doors of the countries are closed to him; the law hunts or shuns him; kings listen to his utterances and feel their structures tremble and stagger. And the quiet little man skulks here and there, planning, plotting, exhorting. Wherever he goes he leaves his footprint of blood and violence and ruin.

He has done no specific crime, this gentle little man, yet he has spent years in prison and in exile. He has been accused countless times. Wherever he has been assassination and rebellions have sprouted, but never has he personally been incriminated. He works in the dark and escapes in the dark back to his little mechanical shop in Soho, London, while one Government after another reels from his unseen blows.

His name is Malatesta, and he has just again eluded the Italian police after stirring up the bloody Ancona strikes which forced the calling out of Italy's naval and military forces. The monarchs on their thrones are doomed to more quaking.

When the Italian navy arrived in too great strength for the Ancona strikers, it is said that Malatesta, disguised as a workman, left his rooms in great haste and escaped into Switzerland. In searching his house the police say they found letters and money orders from American anarchists, and notes advising Malatesta to assassinate the Italian King. More than likely the last is a bit of police information given out for the effect. The quiet little Soho mechanician does not kill.

"Kill kings?" he said on one occasion. "Too foolish. I should rather kill chickens. They are good to eat, but what could one do with a king?"

The Malatestas were counts of the Holy Roman Empire. Their line dates from the thirteenth century, when Malatesta da Verruchio set himself as Lord of Rimini and handed down a fief which his descendants held for more than three centuries. The Malatestas are of the first families of Italy, and the old castle of Rimini, in whose shade the lovely Francesca listened to the tender pleadings of her Paolo, may still be seen, though time has stripped it of its gardens and glories and converted it into a macaroni factory.

This is the line of the little man who makes kings tremble. Count Enrico Malatesta he has the right to call himself, but that he has never done. His father and uncles were high commanders in the forces of Crown Prince Humbert when Victor Emmanuel drove the Austrians out of Italy. He himself has been openly accused of having instigated the assassination of that same Humbert.

Malatesta is now 61 years old. About forty years ago, when he was a medical student in Naples, he threw off the rank and station to which he was born, and assisted in the fomenting of a Roumanian uprising against Turkey. The Porte hunted him out and he returned to Italy.

In 1899, having been successively expelled from Italy, Turkey, Spain, France, Russia, Germany, Switzerland, and Belgium, and proscribed in every European country save England, he went to the United States at the call of Paterson and Reading radicals to become editor of La Question Sociale in Paterson. First, however, he had to be rescued from a small island off the Tunisian coast, whither Italy had exiled him.

Malatesta lectured for a time in America, was shot in the thigh at one of the Anarchist meetings and saved from death by Gaetano Bresci, who ingratiated himself with the Red leader by the rescue and soon became an intimate.

In 1900 Malatesta went to London and established himself in Soho and Islington. A little later Bresci sailed for Italy with two companions. And then came the news of the assassination of King Humbert. The police have not yet been convinced that the plot to kill the King was not hatched in Paterson by Malatesta.

But a little later Malatesta appeared in Paris. Almost immediately there were two attempts on the life of the Persian Shah, then visiting the French capital. A shot at the French President followed. In Switzerland and Belgium riots attended the visits of Malatesta. In Germany, it was said, his influence brought about an attempt on the Kaiser.

That is the record of this quiet, urbane little Italian. Yet Malatesta is neither a bomb-thrower nor a maker of bombs, though his appearance would suggest that character to the popular mind. He is rather heavily built, swarthy, bearded and intense, with glittering black eyes and nervous, peaceless fingers.

Sinkers and Floaters.

The gentle art of determining the age of eggs has been explained to the heads of all state institutions. Hen fruit that sinks in a 10 per cent. salt solution is fresh; if it remains suspended it is at least three days old, and if it floats is five or more days old. After that it is only a matter of cracking the shell and giving the bird a chance to fly. The salt solution differs from the market in that the lower the eggs the higher the price.

Frankenstein Is Outdone

DOWN to the banks of the Rhine tramped a hideous creature, eight feet in height and of tremendous strength. His yellow skin was stretched so taut that the muscles and arteries beneath could be discerned. His watery eyes seemed almost of the same color as the soiled gray sockets in which they were set; his complexion was shriveled, and his lips were horribly straight and black. So frightful was his appearance that the little birds fluttered terror stricken from the trees and bushes as he passed, while the very leaves turned themselves upside down in disgust.

The creature was about to drink from the river, when his attention was diverted by a blonde giant who sat on a near-by rock and regarded him from little piggish eyes with irritating calm. The blonde giant had a bull neck, small, mean features, and a fat, soft body, and was clothed in garments of a strange free-grey color.

An expression of indescribable malevolence swept over the countenance of the hideous creature. He contorted his features into a repulsive grimace, thrust out his tongue at the blonde giant, and roared in terrifying tones: "Bo!"

"Pfui!" responded the blonde giant phlegmatically, drawing a piece of sausage from one of his capacious pockets and devouring it with relish.

The hideous creature started at him in amazement. "Aren't you terrified by my ugliness?" he inquired.

The blonde giant shook his head coldly. "Not at all," he replied. "You wouldn't look badly if you wore a uniform like mine."

"But," protested the hideous creature, "you are the first living thing that has ever looked upon me without being frightened into convulsions. Surely my fearful reputation must be known to you."

"You have the advantage of me," replied the blonde giant, cramming his mouth with sausage.

The hideous creature sighed. "And I thought I was famous," he moaned. "I am Frankenstein's monster. A young man named Frankenstein built me in his laboratory; but he made me so repulsive in appearance that no human being could endure me. Rebuffed and despised by everyone I declared everlasting war against the human race, and especially against Frankenstein, who was responsible for my misery. I murdered his little brother, then his best friend, and finally his bride on her wedding night."

"So!" said the blonde giant with increasing interest. "What other crimes did you commit?"

"No others," replied Frankenstein's monster in some surprise. "Arn't the ones I name sufficient to make you tremble before me?"

The blonde giant laughed merrily. "You are a cheap piker," said he. "If you want to frighten me, you'll have to get a reputation."

Frankenstein's monster peered at him curiously. "Who are you, anyway?" he asked, "and what have you done to lead you to view my murders with such contempt?"

"I am the Blonde Beast," replied the bull-necked one. "My father was German Militarism and my mother was German Kultur. I have murdered thousands upon thousands of women and children, and millions of the world's bravest men have filled unmarked graves because of me. I have torn innumerable innocents from their homes and sent them into degradation and hopeless slavery. I have massacred myriads of helpless Armenians without giving them a chance for their lives. I have shattered international law in every conceivable way, and I have violated every known tenet of decency and chivalry. I have rendered my country barren of composers, drammtists and poets; I have supplanted love with hate; I have sent my hirelings into every nation to debauch and defile whomsoever was so weak as to listen to them or to accept their bribes. Some day I hope to destroy my parents and even the entire world."

With a look of fear and loathing in his eyes, Frankenstein's monster backed slowly away from the Blonde Beast.

"I thought I was pretty bad," said he, "but I'm a saint compared with you. If I should ever fall as low as you have fallen, I sincerely hope that posterity will never find it out."

Ten seconds later Frankenstein's monster was fleeing from the Blonde Beast at top speed, whimpering fearfully, and occasionally causing the crags to echo with shrill cries for help.—Kenneth L. Roberts.

"Vaudevillians" Are Idlers.

An agitation has been initiated at Ottawa to force the drafting of all fit vaudeville performers under the classification of idlers.

The Silence of the Doers.

Friends who have been and seen and who had come home again had gone off blithely and unselfishly, to drive ambulances, to nurse the wounded, to know the storm centre for themselves; and they had come back sobered, which was intelligible, and silent, which was unintelligible. That they should be so strangely reticent in speaking of the grim total fact and of their inner reactions was unnatural. They had been willing to communicate a few items from their adventure, but of their total experience they would not speak. The cleverest raconteur broke down. The most discerning philosopher found himself beyond his depth. A touch of the ineffable seemed to have entered into the lives of all such who had seen and shared, however briefly and humbly, in the strain and stress of the storm centre.—Atlantic.

Wouldn't Hang the Jury.

An old negro named Ephraim, having been sworn on the jury in a murder trial, for some time resisted a verdict of guilty for no other apparent reason than his strong aversion to capital punishment in general. Finally the foreman explained to him that it was a question either of hanging the prisoner or hanging the jury and that it all depended on him. "Fo' gracious, sah," replied Uncle Ephraim, "on dem reasonments de prisoner am sho' guilty."

It Was and Did.

Jim Brown lives in a community noted for the corruption of its politics. He drove into town the other day with an old horse.

"Hello!" said his friend Bill. "That horse of yours looks almost old enough to vote."

"Ye-as," drawled Jim. "He has voted two or three times."

For your guidance in estimating, we might say that The Examiner is printing and distributing to the Merchants, for use on Dillar Day, 25,000 blanks, and it is only necessary to estimate what number each purchaser thinks will be used on the great day. Should any store run short of blanks, The Examiner will print more, so that the number printed might reach as high as 40,000. The number of estimates put in the last Dollar Day Campaign was in the neighbourhood of 10,000. With this information, an estimate can be made before coming to town. Of course as many estimates can be made as the purchaser has blanks, and they will get one with every Dollar purchase they make.

Make up your mind what and where you want to buy and come to Peterborough on Wednesday, August 21st, expecting the greatest economy shopping event of your lives.

YOU CAN RECOGNIZE ALL THE STORES WHERE DOLLAR SPECIALS ARE BEING GIVEN BY THE RED LETTERED PENNANTS IN THEIR WINDOWS.

Little Jim

By M. QUAD

Copyright by Associated Literary Press.

There were five of us and a boy in the far western stage coach as it rolled over the rough roads in Dakota. We had been together for four days. We called the boy Jim because his father did. We had twenty miles to go to reach the terminus, and the hour was about 2 o'clock in the afternoon when the coach came to a sudden halt as it rolled uphill. Next moment the driver called to us:

"All you folks what don't want your heads blown off had better git down and line up. We've been stopped by a road agent!"

It seems cowardly when you read it, but to get down and submit to be robbed was the wisest thing to do under the circumstances. Little Jim was not a bit frightened. The boy had lined up beside his father. As the road agent looked down into his face the lad cried out:

"Why, it's Mr. Pelton—Mr. Pelton! Say, Mr. Pelton, I'm awfully glad to see you! Where've you been this long time?"

"So it's you, Jimmy?" laughed the robber as he held out his hands for a shake. "Well, you've been growing since I saw you last. It's a wonder you knew me at first sight."

"Oh, I used to like you so well I couldn't forget your face," replied the boy. "Are there robbers around, Mr Pelton?" With gentle hand the man pushed the boy into line and then stepped back a pace or two. As he did so his face grew very sober, and I saw a dash in his black eyes I did not like. His voice was low and steady as he finally said:

"I'm much obliged for your promptness in climbing down and lining up and I think I'll let you off this time. The four of you may get back into the stage and go on."

The colonel took his son by the hand and attempted to enter the stage with us, but the robber motioned him back.

At our disappearance the man turned on Colonel Weston and pointed to the hillside on the right and said:

"Move on that way, Jimmy, give me your hand and I'll help you along."

The white faced colonel entered the pines and held a straight course up the hill. Behind him came the robber and his son. The boy had been full of curiosity at first, but presently he was awed and frightened by the look cast upon his father. Two or three years before he and Mr. Pelton had been great friends. Mr. Pelton had been manager for his father. One day there had been a bitter quarrel, pistols had been drawn, the sheriff had rushed in, and Mr. Pelton had fled to escape arrest. He remembered his father calling the fugitive a thief and of men being sent out to hunt him down. All this came back to him as they followed the father up the rough way, and, though he knew nothing of man's vengeance, there was a feeling of dread in his soul. Now and then the robber ordered the colonel to the right or left, but those were the only words spoken until they finally reached a rude camp nigh among the bowlders. Even then nothing was said for a long five minutes. Each sat down to rest. They did not look at each other. By and by the robber half turned to look the colonel in the face and said:

"I've waited for this for two years. I could neither die nor go away until I had killed you!"

"It will be murder—cold blooded murder!" replied the colonel as he folded his arms.

"If it was murder a hundred times over I'd do it. Do you suppose I can forget Rose Harper? Who separated us? Who maligned me? Who wrecked my life and sent her to a suicide's grave? Who drove me to be a fugitive from justice on a false charge? I'd kill you if a thousand men surrounded me!"

"Take the boy away first," said the colonel, with a touch of entreaty in his voice.

"Yes, that will be proper," answered Pelton. "Come, Jimmy, let's take a walk."

The boy crossed over to his father in a puzzled way, and the father lifted him up and kissed him. When he put him down he said to him:

"Run along, Jimmy. If you don't find me here when you come back Mr Pelton will take care of you."

"Oh, yes! Mr. Pelton will take care of me and see that I get home," replied the lad. "I'm awfully glad to see him."

The lad started for his walk whistling as he went, and his father stood erect with folded arms and faced the outlaw and death. He closed his eyes and his lips moved. Presently he heard the click of a pistol and drew in his breath. Thus for a long minute and then the man opened his eyes. Mr. Pelton sat with his hands over his face. When he dropped them there were tears in his eyes.

"I can't do it. Little Jim would know it some day. When he comes tell him take him and go down to the road. It's only three miles to Cedarville."

With that he walked off and was out of sight in a moment. When little Jim returned he found his father sitting as he had left him and gazing into the woods.

"What is it, father?" he asked. "What's the matter with you, and where is Mr. Pelton?"

The man rose up slowly, took the boy's hand in his and without a word in answer he led the way down to the stage trail.

One day is worth two tomorrows. Have you something to do tomorrow? Do it today.—B. Franklin.

The German Taint.

"At last my dream of freedom has come true and it does not seem right not to have a German beast at my heels all day long. Never allow any one who is tainted with one drop of German blood to speak to you or yours. It is beautiful here and the people are very kind and friendly. I am quite happy. Love to all."

Freed from Germany after three years of such imprisonment as is known to other lands only from reading between the lines of scant messages sent by the victims, Pte. Percy A. Dunbar, 15th Battalion, in these words writes to Mrs. Scanlow in Toronto from Port Frij, the Hague, Holland. The writer is a second cousin of the late James J. Hill, the American railroad king.

Pte. Dunbar went overseas, in 1914 with the 48th Highlanders, since known as the 15th Battalion, and was taken prisoner at St. Julien along with many of his comrades in April of the next year. He was in prison camp until sent over the Netherlands border.

Roman Catholics Busy.

The Roman Catholics of Canada are accomplishing much in welfare work for the soldiers of the Dominion serving in Europe, according to a recent report received by the Knights of Columbus Committee on War Activities. Eight hut chapels or recreation rooms are now being conducted in England, while two huts and a number of tents are maintained in France. Others are to be erected without delay. A large amount of church supplies have been issued to chaplains to aid soldiers. Comforts and recreation are being provided for the men.

A Baby's Skin

What is so beautiful as baby's soft, smooth, velvety skin? And how is it to be kept free from chafing, irritations and distressing eczema? This is every mother's question.

Many have found the answer in the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment. Applied after the bath, this soothing, healing ointment overcomes irritation of the skin and prevents the development of eczema and other annoying skin diseases.

RECOGNIZE VALUE OF WHEAT

Shortage Has Shown Us the Wonderful and Unique Qualities Contained in the Grain.

As absence makes the heart grow fonder, so does scarcity of wheat invite attention to its wonderful and unique qualities as food. We have been eating wheat products all these years as a matter of course, and it never occurred to us that we might ever be called on to go without them. Now that it is necessary to use wheat substitutes, we have discovered that useful as they are there is nothing that really takes the place of wheat flour.

The magic of the wheat lies in its gluten—what the baker refers to as the "binder." He must have a certain proportion of wheat flour to furnish the binder, or his oatmeal bread or his rice pastry crumbles. The substitutes have the same nourishment as the wheat. But they lack the quality of the wheat flour crust. There is nothing in them to imprison the gases liberated by yeast, and so they refuse to rise like wheat dough. Bread made of the substitutes is heavy and soggy unless there is enough wheat dough mixed in to give it life.

Without wheat we go without bread, without cake, without pie, without strawberry shortcake. No affection for corn pone can make it a substitute for all these stand-bys of the table. If it is necessary for the sake of the war, we shall cheerfully go without. Any deprivation we may feel is as nothing to what our associates in arms already have undergone. But we shall look forward to the happy days when there will be an abundance of wheat once more.—Kansas City Star.

RECORD BELONGS TO SIRIUS

Small Vessel Was the First to Cross the Atlantic Wholly Under Its Own Steam.

This spring marks the eightieth anniversary of an important event in modern history—the voyage from Cork to New York of the Sirius, the first vessel to cross the Atlantic wholly under its own steam. All that remains of that stanch little craft is a number of brass paper-weights made from the metal work after it was wrecked in Ballycotton bay in 1847. Captain Roberts, commander of the 412-ton Sirius on its maiden trip, was later transferred to the President, which went down with all on board. Thus both the Sirius and her master met with a tragic end.

The Sirius made the voyage from Cork in 19 days, reaching New York only a few hours before the Great Western, another steamship which had sailed from Bristol. The latter made the best time, crossing the ocean in 15 days. The Sirius had a passenger list of seven on its initial voyage, the youngest of whom was Vincent E. Ransome, then four years old, who was reported living a few years ago in Wiltshire, England, where he was long the rector of a parish church.

The Sirius was a schooner-rigged ship and was 178 feet over all, with a beam of 25 feet and a depth of 18 feet.

2. Verse 42. Why would you say or not, that Christians to-day do not fellowship one with another a intimately as they should?

3. Verse 43. If the terrible consequences of sin were more frequently preached would sinners in our congregations still be filled with "fear"?

4. Verses 44, 45. Why or why not, would having all things in common be a good system for Christains to adopt to-day?

5. Verses 46-47. If fellowship, joy and gladness were more fully manifested among Christians today what effect would that have upon getting inners converted?

7. To what extent should a Christian consider that what he possesses is his own?

8. Verse 32. Was it God's plan for them to have all things in common in that day or did they allow their love to run away with their judgment? (This is one of the questions which may be answered in writing by members of the club.)

10. Verses 34, 35. Speaking from first hand knowledge, how many true Christians do you know that "lack" any necessary thing in this life?

FAD WELCOMED BY ARTISTS

Painted Designs on Lingerie Give Opportunity for Unlimited Display of Originality.

Now that the hard-hearted hosiery manufacturers have decided to reduce their manufacturing costs by cutting out the fancy colors and startling designs of the ladies' lines and limiting the output to plain somber shades that cannot be heard coming, that portion of femininity that demands novelties in dress that fairly scream will have to fall back on the new fad in underwear.

Oil paintings, done to suit the individual taste, on the lingerie, each piece to follow the same design and make up the set, and a mosquito net overdress will put a spiderweb stocking in the shade when it comes to startling scenic effects.

Imagine a set with a lifelike representation of the execution of Marie Antoinette on the back of the corset cover and a panoramic sketch of the taking of the Bastile running around the bottom of the underskirt, with other sidelights of the French Revolution sandwiched in where opportunity presents.

Possibilities? Why! A pair of silk ones never began to offer the possibilities for effective display of the artistic temperament that this new fad does. All struggling artists whose productions are not in demand since the war economics have put a quietus on the picture market will rise en masse and call the originator of the new idea blessed.—Brockton Times.

Kossovo Day and the Serbians

DURING the last week of June the people on this continent joined others in observing the discovery of America.

In 1389 a great battle was fought between the Turks and the Serbs. The Turks won. The day has ever since been observed by the Serbs as a day of mourning. This year Americans helped the Serbs to keep it. It has taken Americans a long time to appreciate what Serbia has meant in history, but they are now beginning to appreciate her.

Had it not been for Serbia, Turkey would have overrun Europe as far as Vienna sooner than she did. Had Serbia not been able to withstand the forces of Austria as she did, she would have been overwhelmed sooner than she was—and when she was, it took Germany and Bulgaria as well to do the work.

Serbia, militarily and economically a prosperous country during the centuries preceding the battle of the plain of Kossovo (plain of the blackbirds), so exhausted the Turks in the battle that they did not completely subdue Serbia for seventy years after.

In that battle both the Serbian King Lazar and the Turkish Sultan Murad lost their lives. The legend has it that on the eve of the battle the Serbian King dreamed that he saw great earthly possessions as a reward for letting the Turks march through his territory, and he also saw a heavenly crown as a reward for resistance. He chose the latter and hence Kossovo Day has always had deep religious significance to the Serbs.

It was appropriate, therefore, that a service was held in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, of New York City, in which the clergy of the Protestant Episcopal, Presbyterian, Serbian, and Russian Churches took part. In his sermon Dr. Robbins, dean of the cathedral, said:

"Kossovo Day voices the cry of a race that more than five hundred years ago suffered martyrdom for freedom. Like Israel, Serbia stood in the way of a great and ruthless conqueror, seeking world dominion, and faced him in the name of freedom and faith.

"But Israel proved, and Serbia also proves, that there is something in the world stronger than brute force. It is that indestructible thing, the spirit of a nation that remembers. At Kossovo Serbia stood in the face of the Turks, between the Turk and Europe. She fell, but the Turk suffered so heavily that Europe had a breathing space and time to prepare. What Belgium did in the first month of the present war Serbia did on the field of Kossovo."

The following day, at a celebration at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York, Serbia was picturesquely to the fore by reason of many Serbian khaki uniforms, with feathered skull-caps and with coats thrown back from the shoulder so as to display the scarlet shirt. Among other distinguished speakers was the Serbian Minister, Dr. Ljubomir Michaelovitch, who asserted:

"The battle of Kossovo taught us the value of liberty and honor above everything else. Our people have again sacrificed all that a nation can sacrifice, but have saved their honor!"

The Minister added: "The liberty and union of the Polish, Czechoslovak, and Jugoslav nations is the surest guarantee of world peace and check to Pan-Germany." It is not only the Serbs of Serbia who are interested in Kossovo Day. The Serbians, about five millions in the Kingdom of Serbia, are but a part of the Jugoslav race, which also includes the Croats and Slovenes from Austria-Hungary. The three factions, together with the Serbs in Boston and elsewhere, number about thirteen millions. They stand not only for national independence but also for united endeavor with the Poles and the Czechoslovaks.

Among all the Slavs, however, it will always be Serbia that will have peculiar prominence. This is not only because her geographical position barred the way to the Turks in their attempt to extend Greater Germany southward. It is, in the ultimate analysis, because of the spirit of a people that has known how, year by year, to keep Kossovo Day, a day of mourning, as a day of honor.

Buttonless.

"I've been reading an article on electricity, John," said a gossiping woman to her husband as she laid down a copy of a technical newspaper she had been perusing and looked over her glasses at her better half. "And it appears that before long we'll be able to get pretty well everything we want just by touching a button."

"It will never pay here," growled the husband. "You would never be able to get anything in that way."

"Why not, John?"

"Because nothing on earth would ever make you touch a button. Look at my shirt!"

Newfoundland Seal Fishery.

The seal fishery for 1918, which has just closed, was only a fair one on account of weather and ice conditions. It was prosecuted by 12 steamships, 11 of which went to the ice pans off the northeast coast of the island and the other to the Gulf of St. Lawrence. One vessel made a second voyage, the only one making a second trip since 1897. She was only fairly successful, as although the seals were very plentiful, weather conditions were most unfavorable. The northern fleet report that on March 15 it experienced the most severe storm for 46 years, and the vessel that prosecuted the fishery in the gulf reported similar conditions, it being impossible for the steamer to get around owing to terrific storms and heavy ice.

The total catch of seals amounted to 151,431, weighing 3,867 tons 10 hundredweight net, valued at $863,552. This makes a decrease of 44,797 in number over that of 1917, but an increase in weight of 608 tons 15 hundredweight and an increase in value of $346,836. Owing to the great demand for all kinds of oils, the price paid for seals has been the highest on record—$12 per hundredweight for young seals, $9.40 for bedlamers, and $9 for old seals.

About 2,000 seals were taken by landsmen this season, and they were found between Cape Spear and Cape Bonavista.—Commerce Reports.

The Legal "SS."

The symbol "s.s." used in legal parlance is an abbreviation of the Latin word "scilicet" and means "to wit" or "that is to say." It is used to call attention to what is immediately to follow, introducing explanatory matter relating to what has immediately preceded. Other abbreviations for the same word are "Scil" and "Sc." The word "scilicet" is in itself a contraction of the Latin words "scire licet," and means, literally, "it is permitted to know."

Prolonged Applause.

It was at the end of the second act of the worst musical comedy of the season—absolutely the worst.

"What are you applauding for?" said the thin man to the stout person at his side.

"To show how thankful I am that the curtain's down at last," replied the stout person as he reached for his hat.

THE BASS FAMILY.

Nobody Works But Father at Spawning Time.

In the bass family nobody works but father, according to authorities on fish. A decorated postcard has been mailed to many fishermen asking their help for father bass in his onerous domestic duties by refraining from fishing over the spawning beds.

The card shows a picture of a male bass guarding his nest. At the top of the card, as a motto for his faithfulness, are printed the lines:

"Nobody works but father—
He's on guard all day;
Fins in constant motion,
Keeping the foes away."

According to the printed matter on the card, "In the bass family the male selects a nesting place and then seeks and escorts to it a mate. From 3,000 to 10,000 eggs are laid, after which the mother bass is driven away, never to return or to know her progeny.

"Father bass takes a position immediately over the nest, constantly fanning it with his fins and ever watchful for intruders. This vigil continues for ten days to two weeks, while the eggs are developing and hatching, and for a few days thereafter, while the young are getting ready to try their fins. Woe unto the sucker or other enemy which appears too near to the nest. The faithful paternal guardian darts fiercely after it and attempts to rip it open with his dorsal fin. By this means, unless he is attacked by overwhelming numbers of carp, or caught by the angler, the father bass is able to hatch his brood and care for them until they scatter for food.

"The basses cannot be artificially propagated, and for the supply of such fishes we must according depend upon the vigilance of father bass. The spawning time of all fishes is governed by water temperature. In normal season in Ontario waters the basses do not leave their nests before July 1, and in late seasons the male bass may be soon hovering over his nest until well past the middle of July.

"Let us therefore give father bass a chance to do his bit in food conservation by working for an extension of the close season until July 1, and let us refrain from fishing over the spawning beds whenever we find him guarding his nest, even if it be during the open season."

Be Careful What You Wash Your Hair With

Don't use prepared shampoos or anything else, that contains too much alkali, for this is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is just plain mulsified cocoanut oil, for it is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap, and beats anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy, and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.

The Other Side of War.

There certainly was no denying the fact that Sapper Higgins generally got results. And where results were difficult to produce, there was no limit he would not go to get them. Furthermore, there was little suggestive of the commonplace or ordinary about Higgin's style. Sometimes the Higgins touch bore all the hallmarks of the genius. For instance, the wire in front of a certain trench had been so badly mauled and cut one day as to render it practically worthless. This sad state of affairs was promptly communicated to the engineers, with a request that the matter be attended to forthwith if not sooner. A supply of entanglement was immediately despatched to the front line along with Higgins, who was to be given a "wiring party" and under cover of darkness repair the damage. As soon as darkness arrived the work commenced and had progressed almost to a point of completion without mishap when suddenly the supply of tanglefoot ran out. Truly this was a catastrophe, and the dump, or replenishing base, was three-quarters of a mile away, along a road infested by shells, not to mention fixed rifles and other obnoxious things. And furthermore, by the time another supply could be fetched and prepared, daylight would doubtless overtake the workers.

But Higgins came through handsomely. Across the way, a matter of perhaps one hundred yards, were the Hun trenches. Their wiring had but recently been reinforced by a system of "knife-rests"; that it, entanglements prepared in units of about 14-foot lengths in the shape of a knife-rest. These were merely anchored to the earth by means of wire stays to low stubs. Only one man in ten thousand would have thought of such a solution to the dilemma, and possibly a smaller percentage would have adopted it. But presently Higgins was leading his band over to the German wire, and for the next half hour shadowy figures silently flitted back and forth, taking from him who had and adding to him who had not. So skilfully was the pilfering done that not until daylight was the transfer discovered. And then a heartless dawn revealed many yards of foe parapet absolutely devoid of fencing, while ours reposed snugly and serenely behind an unbroken line of barbed-wire entanglement. We did our best to picture the scenes in that German trench when the officer discovered the loss, but I think even our wildest fancies failed to picture truthfully the session between officer and sentries. Such a liberty had never before been taken, and possibly to this fact was due in a large measure the success of the enterprise. Truly Higgins had a way with him and, one might say, a very taking way.—Lieut. Leon Archibald, in Good Housekeeping.

Piano Keys.

The reason that piano keys become yellow is that they absorb the grease from the fingers. To remove this grease cover the ivory with a paste made of whiting and a solution of potash. Let it remain for twenty-four hours, when the ivory should be nearly if not quite as white as when new.

Electricity on the Farm.

It is apparent from the fact that 200,000 horse power in electric motors is now actually being used on the farm that the phrase "Electricity on the Farm" does not constitute an idle dream any longer, remarks the General Electric Review. Although 100,000 horse power of this is used for irrigation and reclamation purposes (a peculiarity of semiarid sections), the remainder, or 40,000 horse power, is actually being used for miscellaneous farm purposes, such as driving the cream separator, butter churn, and so on. The only thing that we are not doing with electricity on any scale is plowing and cultivating, and this now bids fair to be a commercial reality in the very near future.—Scientific American.

Enemy's Intentions Across the Ancre Are Still Obscure—Artillery Activity on British Front—No Developments in Past Two Days.

PATROLS CROSSED ANCRE

(Associated Press.)

With the British Army in France, August 16.—The enemy artillery was active last night from one end of the British front to the other. The activity was especially marked along the new Somme battle front in the Essurts sector and in the region of LaBassee, on the north front, where there was heavy gun bombardment. There was no development of activity by the enemy infantry anywhere.

All along the Somme front, the British are continuing various slight forward movements to gain advantage of positions. It was in movements of this kind that Damery and Parville came yesterday into British hands.

The situation north of the Ancre has not yet been clarified, the enemy's intentions being obscure. There are no further reports of widespread withdrawals in this region although the enemy seem to have abandoned several of his small forward positions. On the other hand British patrols that crossed the Ancre last night were fired upon and forced to return.

Soldiers Crowd Amiens Church

Thanksgiving Mass for Relief of the Capital City of Old Picardy

(By William Philip Simms.)

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN FRANCE, August 16.— Amiens is no longer silent and deserted.

In one of the most dramatic ceremonies of the war, while the famous cathedral resounded with speech and song for the first time in nearly five months, the relief of Picardy's capital was consecrated to-day, simultaneously with the reconsecration of the edifice, which has been shattered and profaned by German shell and bomb since March.

To-day the Germans are seventeen miles away, at the nearest point.

The cathedral was opened at a mass attended by every soldier who could arrange the journey. They came from miles around. The choir was composed entirely of soldiers in dusty, rusty horizon blue. The organist and violinist were attired the same way. Only the pastor was garbed for the occasion. His assistants, like the choir, wore the ordinary uniform of the trenches.

LOCK TENDER DROWNED GATES SWEPT AWAY

PORT COLBORNE, Aug. 16.—One of the Welland canal lock tenders, Richard Carrell, was drowned about ten o'clock this morning, when he and the gates at Lock 12, and some of the foot gates were carried away by the Steamer Pawnee of the Montreal Transportation Co. The lock-keeper was lowering valves at the time. Navigation will be delayed from 24 to 30 hours both up and down the canal. Mr. Richard Carrell was Reeve of Merriton, and lockmaster for many years. The engineer of the Steamer Pawnee declares his engines refused to reverse.

Capture Village With Machine Guns and Prisoners—Enemy Resistance Shows Strength.

AIRCRAFT NUMEROUS

(J. F. B. Livesay — Canadian Press Correspondent).

WITH THE CANADIAN FORCES, Aug. 16.—The Canadians captured the village of Parvilles in a smart operation, which enabled them to straighten out their line in that sector of the front. A number of machine guns and prisoners were taken. The latest report was that our troops were holding the village, and reinforcements have advanced in support against a strong post the enemy has in the vicinity. Enemy artillery active, which indicates the stiffening of resistance.

Hostile aircraft have been considerably strengthened in the whole of this Amiens - Montdidier front. Some thirty-four enemy divisions have been engaged, including eleven fresh divisions and two tired divisions from his reserve. The enemy has used up every battalion of two of the four divisions holding his line in front of the Canadians, these being the 79th and the 118th.

GERMANS DIG NEW LINES ON THE VESLE

Only Intermittent Bombardment on This Sector and Yanks Settle Down to Trench Life.

(United Press Service.)

(By Fred S. Ferguson.)

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMIES IN FRANCE, Aug. 16.—Intermittent bombardment of the rear areas along the Vesle continues. Otherwise, this portion of the front is generally quiet.

American patrols crossing the river at a new point, found the Germans had dug in their entire line there and were strongly defending it with machine guns.

Three Italian soldiers captured near Soissons early in July, reached the American lines to-day and related experiences similar to those recently described by two escaped British soldiers. They corroborated the latter's stories about cruel treatment of Allied prisoners and lack of food.

Will Reconsider the Good Roads Question

County Council Wants the Best Highways it Can Afford But Has Well-Defined Objections to the Provincial Good Roads Scheme—Careful Survey at November Session.

YESTERDAY'S DECISION

Mr. Fred Eason's motion at yesterday afternoon's session of the County Council, that "this county prepare to adopt the Good Roads System at the November session," divided the council evenly, and left the deciding vote to Warden Anderson.

The motion was seconded by Reeve McIntosh, "for the fun of it," as he said at first, but later he developed an idea that favoured county provincial roads from the Northumberland border through Monaghan and Smith to the Bobcaygeon road, and from the same starting point to Hastings.

When the vote was taken, the question had been debated to tatters. Every argument that could be thought of was dragged into the line, as reinforcements are rushed into the heat of battle. At times the subject was cool and carefully weighed, and then the discussion would flare up into a hot flame.

WOULD COMMIT THE COUNCIL.

At any rate, in the moment of decision, the Warden became analytical. He pointed out that Mr. Eason's motion committed the council to passing the Good Roads bylaw in November. It read "that this council prepare to adopt the Good Roads system in November," and since that admitted only one interpretation the Warden declared that he would vote against it. However, he asserted that the whole council was interested in Good Roads, while every member was more or less dissatisfied with the Provincial Good Roads system. He declared that Reeve McIntosh's idea did not coincide with Mr. Eason's, and very tactfully suggested that the best way was the unanimous way. Several of the councillors were unprepared to vote because they were not familiar with the Good Roads question. Finally the Warden said that he would support Mr. Eason's motion if it were amended to the effect that the council revise the proposed map of the roads that may be taken over under the Good Roads scheme, and report at the November session. This would give all the councillors an opportunity of carefully studying the question from the standpoint of their respective townships, and of the County as a whole; a representative of the Highways Department could be invited to meet the council in November, and then after full and careful deliberation the final adoption of the scheme could be made if the council were in favour of it.

To this motion was added Reeve McIntosh's proposal that the county confer with the government with regard to a County-Provincial road from the Northumberland border through Monaghan and Smith to the Bobcaygeon Road, and including two floating bridges; also through Otonabee to Hastings.

TO STUDY MAPS.

Reeve Griffith of Belmont submitted a motion that the Highways Department provide the council with 18 maps of the county, to be distributed among the members in order that they

A Bombing Expedition

German Military Objectives Were Successfully Bombed by the Americans.

(By Frank J. Taylor.)
(United Press.)

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMIES IN FRANCE, August 15.— American airmen to-day bombed the German railroad yards at Dommary and Baron Court, near Metz. Explosions were observed in the central and southern portions of the yards, which completely wiped out tracks and rolling stock. Other bombing squadrons scored direct hits on tracks in front of the Longuydon station. During a reconnaissance flight, American airmen bombed German military objectives at Thiaucourt. A hostile machine was brought down yesterday.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Chesler wishes to make an important announcement, particularly to his own customers, who look to him for the best the market can produce at moderate prices.

He has just returned from a buying trip to Toronto, where he secured a nice line of Ladies' Dresses, Skirts and Waists, and also bought heavily for Spring delivery. His Fall goods are arriving, and he strongly advises his patrons to make an early choice as, owing to the rapid rise in prices, and scarcity, even the selection at higher rates later on, will not be nearly so good. This is friendly advice, and intended for the friends of his store especially. Chesler's store, at 289 George Street, is a money-saving spot for careful buyers.

FRANK JENNE SAYS:

It is evident from the new goods being shown for this autumn that clothing prices will be from 10 to 20 per cent higher than they were last spring. During my 'Investment Sale' you have an opportunity to secure a suit for fall and winter wear at a discount. "Come to Me" to-morrow and look over these suits and invest in one for economy's sake.

Manpower Situation Necessitates Another Drastic Combing Out of All Eligible Men—Reinforcements Needed.

CHANGE OF POLICY

(By Wm. Philip Simms.)
(United Press.)

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN FRANCE, August 16.—The entire German army appears to be in a state of complete flux.

Marshal Foch's blow on the Marne and the Allied thrust east of Amiens undoubtedly have upset Field Marshal Vin Hindenburg's plans, necessitating what amounts to an entire change of policy during the remainder of this year's campaign.

German withdrawals in Flanders and north of Albert betray this to some extent, while the appointment of General Von Boehm is corroborative. Hitherto Crown Princes and Dukes have been named as commanders, save in unimportant places, despite Von Hindenburg's known preference for real generals.

Evidence of Trouble.

Further evidence of trouble behind the German lines is seen in a captured order signed by General Ludendorff saying that the German manpower situation necessitates another drastic combing out, and the sending of every possible cook, clerk, etc., into active service, replacing them by broken down and aged soldiers.

From reliable sources it is known that the units in the field are clamouring for reinforcements, which the High Command is unable to give them, the reply invariably being, "You are no worse off than other units."

TORONTO REPORTER SUES THE CITY FOR INJURIES IN RIOT

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, Aug. 16. — Charles H. Blackmore, a reporter, who was beaten up in the recent riots, has issued a unique writ against the city. At any rate, it is considered unique at the city solicitor's office, because it charges the City of Toronto with assault. "A city cannot assault anyone," declared City Solicitor Johnston to-day. The Legal Department has advised the riot victim to withdraw his writ.

DEATH TOLL NOW 50,000

Canada's Sons Who Have Made Supreme Sacrifice—Wastage Has Been 100,000—Pensions Reach $4,000,000

58,713 DRAFTEES

OTTAWA, Aug. 15.—Canada's death toll from four years of war is now approximately 50,000. The wastage of men in the Canadian Expeditionary Force during the four years, including also those incapacitated by wounds, illness or by other causes, is estimated to be a little over 100,000, or at the rate of about 25,000 per year.

The operation of the Military Service Act, which has so far directly produced 58,713 men, not including 23,523 men who reported for duty under the act, and have been either discharged for medical unfitness or other reasons, or who have been granted leave of absence for necessary agricultural or other work, has thus produced a reinforcement reserve that should secure under average conditions of wastage the maintenance at full strength of the divisions at the front for a considerable period to come.

It may be noted also that in addition to the 58,713 draftees actually put into training, voluntary enlistments since November last has added 19,477 men to the Canadian army.

Figures of Wastage.

The figures of wastage up to the recent Picardy offensive in which the Canadians were heavily involved, and from which the total of casualties is not yet available for publication include in round numbers 27,200 killed, 9,350 died of wounds, 2,300 died of disease, 4,350 presumed dead, and 400 missing. This makes a total of 43,200, to which may be added 2,774 prisoners of war and the fallen in the battles of last month, bringing the approximate absolute wastage for these categories up to about 50,000. In addition to these approximately 50,000 men have been returned to Canada as being unfit for further service through wounds or other causes.

Pensions $4,000,000 Annually.

The total number of pensions already granted to returned soldiers is now approximately 30,000, involving an annual payment of over $4,000,000.

In these figures, no account has been taken of the wastage through desertions, transfers to the Air Service or other branches of the Imperial army, which, of course, has made necessary the recruiting of many thousands more to take their places in all the various units of Canada's army. The figures are given only to indicate the war's actual toll from Canada in lives lost or men disabled.

Total Casualties 159,084.

(Star News Service.)

OTTAWA, Aug. 16.—So far no estimate of the casualties suffered by the Canadians in the present fighting has been received, but up to the end of June the total casualties suffered by the corps since the beginning of the war are 159,084, made up as follows: Killed in action, 27,040; died of wounds, 9,280; wounded 113,007; died of disease, 2,257; prisoners of war, 2,774; presumed dead, 4,342; missing, 384; total, 159,084.

By periods the casualties are (in approximate figures) as follows: From beginning of war to Dec. 31, 1915, 14,500; calendar year 1916, 56,500; calendar year 1917, 74,500; to end of July, 1918, 15,000.

The casualties suffered in the principal battles in which the Canadian corps took part are.

Second battle of Ypres (St. Julien), April, 1915, approximately 6,000.
Vimy Ridge, April, 1917, 13,461.
Lens fighting, June, 1917, 10,134.
Hill 70, August, 1917, 10,080.
Passchendaele, November, 1917, 24,530.

The department does not seem to have available individually the casualties suffered in the principal fights of 1916, St. Eloi (eastern fighting of spring); Zillebecke, and Mount Sorrel, in June, and the Somme, from September 15 until November.

HE COUNTY'S POSITION.

Peterborough County Council the inference that its refusal a sign of unprogressiveness. In seven counties it alone has held not perversely, not because it t desire good roads, but because jections to the Provincial sys-

This county is spending a very erable sum annually in the enance of its roads, and it cast its lot to-morrow with the the counties if certain deficienn the Goods Roads system were
ed. Members of the Council objected to the Government's of the cost of keeping up the as outlined in its scheme. The rtion of twenty per cent. of this diture does not seem sufficiently us to them. They also find fault the provision that places the road superviser under the con-of the Highways Department. rmore, the Council argues that a slight change of heart. At there is a willingness to recon-the entire question in Novem-upon the terms they secure from

BOYCOTT GERMAN GOODS.

American Defence Society has taken a campaign to secure y million signatures to boycott an goods. Richard M. Hurd, rman of the Boycott committee of society, has refuted an article
e London Chronicle which said Americans differ with Lloyd ge in his statement that "the r the war lasts the sterner must n economic terms we impose on foe." The instant and enthusiasresponse received in this cam-n, Mr. Hurd told a reporter, s that the American people proto use to the full the economic on against Germany after the nadian soldiers and families who suffered in this war have already e their private resolve that hence-German made goods, wherever d, are to be shunned as the Huns nselves. To make effective any erted or unorganized plan of boy-ng German manufacturers we ld begin now to eradicate the all too prevalent before the war.

German articles possessed a su-iority over Canadian, American or ish made goods. This phase of man propaganda was spread by enemy agents throughout every ntry that presented commercial portunites. It not only facilitated man business and gained for their is an easy entrance into Canada lsewhere, but it also robbed local ustry, deprived home workers of business thus diverted, and fin-assisted the enemy in developing weapon that has scourged the rld for four years.
vidence that this impression of the rivalled quality of many German nufacturers has not yet been dissied can be found to-day. It is the dy fruit of the tenacious trade trine of the Germans, that has not been uprooted. The error persists, usually finds thoughtless expres-n, and in the unthinking minds it y survive. Trade restrictions, boy-t and similar methods will eradi-e it, but the resolution, calmly and passionately reached, that no Can-ian will contribute to the rebuild-of German industry and Kultur should outlaw German goods in this country for a generation or more.

Quoting Mr. Hurd: "The economic weapon remains not merely as a moral right, but as an indispensible shield and as a measure of self-defence against the German war chest of the future."

HUNTSVILLE IS TO BE ENVIED.

Huntsville does not loom large in any geography of Ontario, but it is fast becoming the home of one of the best concert bands in Canada. Its aspirations in this direction are approaching fulfillment judging by the compliments recently paid it by Dr. A. S. Vogt, Musical Director of the Toronto Conservatory of Music, and by Dr. Clarke of the Mendelssohn Choir. According to a press despatch, Dr. Vogt declared that this band was one of the finest in America. Assembling fifty instruments under the direction of Mr. Herbert L. Clarke, who for twenty-five years was solo cornetist with John Philip Sousa, it presented a concert last week that won the unqualified praise of two of the foremost musicians of this country. The programme included Liszt's second Hungarian Rhapsody, Thomas' "Mignon" and Brahm's Magyar Dances 5 and 6. Such a repertory is reminiscent of the best military and concert bands of England and the United States that have been heard in this country.

This is the musical organization that has been established in a little town in Western Ontario. Its accomplishments indicate what other cities may attempt. True, the Huntsville band is supported by the Anglo-American Leather Company, but this fact serves to indicate the method of organization rather than to emphasize the difficulties that are the common experience of most Ontario communities. If Peterborough had an "angel," to use a theatrical term, like the Anglo-Canadian Leather Company, we should doubtless have a band of equal excellence. As it is, the 57th Regimental Band is a starveling, a mere shadow of its one time opulence. The Salvation Army band does not pretend to concert composition. If there were no other considerations, its dependence upon brass instruments to the exclusion of reeds, would preclude that ambition.

While envying Huntsville the programmes of standard music it enjoys, and the influence which Dr. Vogt said would be felt throughout the whole of America, the music lovers of Peterborough must be impatient with the apathy that is exhibited in this city. It is exemplied in the niggardly grants from the Council. Five hundred dollars, however divided, is next to nothing in the funds that are required to maintain or materially assist any band. If the Council believes that its annual hand-outs of $500 have any permanent results in elevating the city's taste for standard music it makes no greater mistake in the expenditure of the people's tax money. And this purpose of cultivating the public appreciation of music that endures, should be the primary consideration in fixing this annual appropriation. Peterborough's ambitions should be a band of forty or more pieces capable of playing music that is better than the ephemeral fluff that pleases for the moment and then is heard no more.

Lots of high steppers overstep themselves.

WHO THE CANADIAN GENERALS ARE.

The names of the Canadian generals who are doing great work in France, are too little known in Canada. Beyond the fact that General Currie is the now famous commander of the Canadian corps, and one of the outstanding generals of the war, few Canadians know who the others are. The censorship of the war correspondence prevents anything like intelligible reporting of battles being given by the press. The performances of particular divisions and brigades and battalions, and the fine work done on special occasions by generals and brigadiers and colonels are not allowed to be mentioned. On one occasion we endeavoured to compile for publication a complete list of the Canadian command on active service, but were unable to complete it from our own records, and were unable to procure any such list on application to the department at Ottawa.

The suggestion that all this suppression serves any useful purpose in so far as the enemy is concerned does not wash. It is merely a case of rules being carried beyond all necessity or reason. It is to be hoped that a new and more enlightened policy is foreshadowed in the speech of Hon. N. W. Rowell yesterday at Newcastle, when he naemd the generals who are in command of several different services in France—Lieut.-Gen. Currie, in command of the corps, Brig.-Gen. Patterson in comamnd of the cavalry brigade, Brig.-Gen. J. W. Stewart in command of the railway troops, while the forestry corps is under the immediate command of Brig.-Gen. McDougall. Now that the ice has been broken and names named publicly, why not, in a democratic country like this, shake off the restraining notion that the reputations of temporary generals in a temporary war like this are too incidental to be worth considering?—Toronto Star.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Let us begin to save coal now by resolving not to begin burning it, unless in case of sickness, until December 1st.

The Nemesis that shadows the Kaiser will be partly satisfied when Germany is forced to tear up another scrap of paper, the treaty of Brest Litovsk.

One of these days you are going to hear Mr. R. Denne announce: "It's going to be greater, grander, better than ever." Then you will know that the fall and the fair are nigh.

Draft agreements with both Italy and Greece to enroll their subjects in Canada for military service are only rumoured, but the Government will succeed in removing a cause of many complaints if the reported negotiations are successful.

American soldiers who arrived in France recently seem to have had a taste of the brief but eventful fighting that fell to the lot of many of Britain's "contemptible army" when it checked the German invasion before the final halt at the Marne. A "Yank" private landed in France, fought in battle and was back in hospital minus a leg, all within a week.

THE AMATEUR SOLDIER WINS

(By Lieutenant J. B. Morton.)

He stumbled down the steps of the dug-out, his revolver still gripped in his right hand. There was earth on the steps, a shell had exploded near the entrance. All round the telephone there was mud. Chips of wood strewed the floor. He moved to the table where the telephone stood, and began to speak. An old candle-end, burning fitfully in a jam-tin, showed up his unshaved chin and exaggerated the lines under his sleepy eyes.

"Yes. Hullo. B Company speaking. Yes. Farman speaking. Dane killed. Wentworth buried. Yes, only myself. About 30 men, yes, we can hold 'em all right."

He clambered up the steps again, kicking aside a fallen sandbag.

Out in the trench there was chaos. Some of the men were trying to build up the parapet before the German artillery began again, others were making an effort to get the wounded into a safe corner. The young Officer stepped over a body that lay very still across the duck-boards. Somebody groaned near him. He mounted the firestep between two men.

"They're coming on again, Sir."

He seized a rifle, saw that it was loaded, and waited. He noticed with satisfaction that his hand was still fairly steady. He left quite cool.

They came across the open ground, a mass of grey figures. The British rifles spoke almost at once. A man with a clay pipe in his mouth slipped backwards almost noiselessly. The young Officer looked down.

"Poor Holbrook," he said.

Something struck his revolver as it hung round his neck by a cord.

"Lucky one," he said, smiling. The men near him smiled, too. They went on firing. Presently a Sergeant came down the trench, his arm bleeding through his torn sleeve.

"They've outed the last gun, Sir."

"If you can manage it, take a rifle," said the officer.

"Very good, sir."

For one moment he felt sick and dizzy. He was a very young officer, and he had had no sleep or food for a long time. His head began to spin, and he wanted to laugh hysterically.

"My God!" he thought. "I'm damned nearly beat."

He went on firing, making cheering remarks to the men round him. When the remnant of the Germans drew back as the British artillery caught them. The attack was over for the present.

He got down from the firestep and walked along the trench, congratulating the men and stopping now and then to distribute cigarettes to the wounded, seeing that they were properly tended. Then he turned back to Company Headquarters. He staggered down the steps and made for the telephone. The candle was still burning, and his face looked much paler when he began to speak.

"Yes. Hullo. B Company. Farman speaking. Beat 'em off. Rather. Of course. Yes, still fit. Men had a bad time, I'm afraid. Yes, thanks."

When he got up his knees felt very weak. "Beat," he said to himself, "beat. Must . . go . . on . . somehow."

Somebody called out from the top of the steps.

"They're coming, sir."

"Again?" He sprang to the steps. "Not them, sir. The Relief."

"Oh . . the . . the . . Relief. Good."

He walked up the steps and told the men to get ready to move out when the Relief came.

"Glad we held 'em," he said to the Sergeant Major.

That was the only comment the amateur soldier was heard to make, both then and later.

Former Peterboro Resident Dead

Died in Michigan After a Lingering Illness.

The Ludington "Daily News" refers in the appended article to the death of a former well-known resident of Peterborough, who passed away in Ludington, Michigan, after a lingering illness. The article follows.

Months of suffering, so intense he was unable to lie in his bed nights since last January, ended for Michael Cranley at his home, 110 west Dowland street, at 7:45 o'clock Sunday morning. Intense pain was patiently endured until death gave him relief.

Mr. Cranley was born in Peterborough county, Ont., April 2, 1866. He came to Ludington at the age of 23 years and married Caherine Dolan of Riverton township Sept. 5, 1893. The widow and four children survive: John Cranley who reached France last week with the 85th division, Anna, Mary and Ruth at home. James Cranley, a brother, lives in Scottville; another brother, John, resides in Peterborough county. Mrs. Margaret Leahy, a sister, lives in Detroit, and Mrs. Mary Quinlan, another sister, lives at Dearborn, Mich.

Mr. Cranley was employed as a switchman on the Pere Marquette railroad, giving up his work there on account of an accident to his hand. For a number of years he was watchman for the Pere Marquette at the James street crossing. Later he had been employed in the freight sheds.

The funeral was held Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock from St. Simon's Catholic Church.

Impressions of the Chautauqua

Some False Impressions and Wrong Views.

The programme that will be given here Chautauqua week, August 16th to August 22nd, will be worth far more than the price of admission if a season ticket be bought, as eleven concerts will be given for two dollars, a little over eighteen cents for a concert; and will be worth every cent of the price of a single admission ticket. Let no one run away with the idea that buying either a single or season ticket is a piece of "charity," every one will get more than full value for his or her money. It is worth while going. It will pay you to go. You will come away richer than before you spent your money. This is what we want to impress on the community. It is for the community's benefit this Chautauqua programme is being brought here, and it will be to your interest to take advantage of it when it comes. It is being brought here primarily to give the people of Peterborough and district something worth while, cheap; not to raise money for Red Cross or any other purposes. But all the money that is made over the regular expenses of bringing it here will be handed over for patriotic purposes, and the more people who take advantage of these splendid programmes, the more money there will be for patriotic purposes.

We hear that some are raising the objection that it should not be brought here during war-time, that the people should not spend their money on such things in these war days. All we say regarding this objection when we see conditions as they are, is that this objection is not only uncalled for, but also false, wrong and pernicious. We all know that money is being spent to-day as if there were no war, on all kinds of luxuries and pleasures. The best we can do under the circumstances is to give the people something worth while on which to spend their money, and not let it all go on gasoline, ice cream, candy, dances and cigars. If we are going to spend our money, in the name of all that is noble and uplifting, let us spend it in listening to such things as Colonel Bain's "If I Could Live My Life Over"; Rev. Dr. Conwell's "Acres of Diamonds"; Shakespeare's "Comedy of Errors," put on by good players and the music of the Welsh Singers and the Tschaikowsky Quartette. Let there be no more of this twaddle about not being right in war-time. If there is to be any "cutting-out," other things should come before this, and let those who talk economy talk against these other things first.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

MANY FROM PETERBORO AT ENNISMORE LAWN SOCIAL

Father McAuley's lawn social at St. Martin's church, acted like a magnet to the countryside about Ennismore last evening, and over two thousand motored, drove or walked to make the affair one of the most successful events held in the country this year. Two hundred and fifty motors alone lined the roadside in front of the town hall, where the picnic was held.

At the gate Messrs. E. Moloney, J. P. Flood and J. K. Galvin acted as treasurers, while at the door of the dining room Messrs. W. G. Scollard, D. Crough, Joe Doran and D. Hickson collected tickets.

CLERGY PRESENT.

Most of the clergy from the surrounding diocese were present, including His Lordship Bishop O'Brien, Dean McColl, Rev. Fathers McAuley, Hylan, of Regisopolis College, Kingston, Meagher, of Lakefield, Galvin, of Downeyville; Sullivan of Victoria Road; O'Leary of Lindsay; Phelan, of Peterboro, and P. Maguire, of Peterboro.

IN THE DINING ROOM.

In the dining room where nearly two thousand had chicken supper, the ladies on the committee were Mesdames E. Murphy, D. Cosgrove, T. Cavanagh, Pat McAuliffe, M. Geary, F. Conway, James Curtin, E. Murphy, T. Murphy, W. J. Crough, and Dick Killen.

On the lawns, which presented a fairy-like appearance, which reached its height when twenty little girls danced the Maypole dance about a gayly decorated pole, the tastefully decorated booths were run by the following:

Lottery Booth, at which Mr. Geo. Lynch, who again made a humorous auctioneer, were the Misses Vivian Galvin, Lillian Crough, Florence Murphy, Stella Hickey, Josie Brick and Sarah Crough.

At the Ice Cream Booth were Misses Julia Killen and Mary Sullivan; the Fish Pond, the Misses Stella Cadigan, Nellie Quinlan and Nellie Galvin; the Soft Drinks, Peter Galvin and W. F. Cavanagh.

After supper, the Chemong Indian band livened up the proceedings by some splendid music including most of the new and popular airs.

LAURIER WITH DR. BELAND AT THREE RIVERS

Liberal Chief Joins in Welcome to the Returned Doctor—Meeting Was Lagely Attended.

OTHER SPEAKERS

THREE RIVERS, Que., Aug. 15.—From three to four thousand people gathered before the City Hall here to-night to express with cheering and applause their pleasure at the return of Hon. Dr. Beland from the German prison, where he had been incarcerated almost since the beginning of the war. Already various parts of the Province have had the opportunity to welcome Dr. Beland home, but there was this difference here to-night, that a Quebec crowd saw him again in a familiar environment, surrounded and supported by such men as Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, Hon. Sydney Fisher and others.

Dr. Beland seemed to have greatly improved in health since his first appearance before a Canadian public on his return.

Ovation For Laurier.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who received an old-time ovation from the crowd, did not speak very long. His voice grew in strength as he proceeded, and at the end he was cheered for a minute or more.

Hon. Jacques Bureau, M.P., introduced Dr. Beland, who expressed his emotion at the warmth of the welcome given him. As soon as the cheers which greeted him died down he referred to his student days in Three Rivers and to his many friends still living here.

The speaker again referred to Belgium as the martyr nation in the present war, to the events which preceded the launching of the German hordes across Belgian territory, to the admissions of guilt in the speeches of the Imperial Chancellor at the time, and to the practical slavery in which Belgians and French inhabitants of northern France now exist.

"I know the value of liberty more than most of you here because I have been without it for so many years," he said. "You who listen to me have never been deprived of it, and cannot therefore feel so deeply as I do in this matter.

No Better Soldiers.

Again declaring that there were some things more precious to a people than comfort and riches, Dr. Beland expressed the sense of keen gratification and pride and pleasure he had taken in the exploits of the French-Canadians at Courcelette and elsewhere in France. Their actions had won the admiration of all the fighting forces in France, and it was to their eternal credit. There were no braver soldiers in Europe, and they had never retreated before the Germans. He praised the United States for the manner in which it was fighting since it got into the war.

National Unity.

Dr. Beland made a plea for national unity, saying that it was his dearest wish to see all the races in the Dominion unite in a friendly endeavour to make Canada great. As the races of the Allied nations on the Western front had forgotten all their past jealousies and little differences, so could those in Canada. (Great applause).

Proud of Beland.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that Dr. Beland was welcomed, not only by his brothers, his sisters, his relatives, his friends, and by French-Canadians, but by his whole Canadian family. Similar enthusiastic receptions were sure to meet him wherever he might go in Canada. His name was known from one end of the country to the other. Endless Canadians were proud that he was a Canadian, and proud to hear him, but however much they wanted to do so, French-Canadians would always claim the greater part of his time and talents. No person had regretted his absence more than his old confreres on the Liberal side. His talents had been greatly needed in the House of Commons. His noble character and his unflagging courage would have been a great asset to Canada.

Germany Alone Responsible.

Sir Wilfrid said he regretted to know that some people still argued that the various nations now fighting in Europe were equally guilty of bringing on the world the present conflict. He was glad to hear Dr. Beland tell them for the third time that only one nation, and that nation Germany, was guilty. None of the Allied nations had desired it, but all had tried in every way consistent with honour to avoid it. Only Germany, in order to enslave Belgium, dismember France of the coal and iron districts which were not taken in 1870, to get the ports of all countries fronting on the North Sea and the English Channel, had desired the war in order to secure such a commanding position that she could dominate the whole world.

Police Disperse Dillon's Meeting

Special to The Examiner:

DUBLIN, August 16.— The police and 500 soldiers dispersed a meeting at Omagh, where John Dillon was about to deliver an address. There was no violence. Dillon refused to the last to desist from efforts to speak, claiming the right of a member of Parliament to address his constituents. Officers advised him to disperse those who had gathered to hear him and thus avoid bloodshed.

SACCHARINE CASES NOW MILADY'S FAD

Chicago Woman Carries Her Sugar With Her "in Vanity Bag."

NEW YORK, Aug. 15.— Gold cigarette cases, hand mirrors and powder bags now must give way to the saccharine vanity case. Milady has added it to her personal equipment, and in some cases has substituted it for the other trinkets usually carried.

The first of the saccharine cases noticed in New York was seen in the grill of the Majestic Hotel, when Miss Holda Ruttle, of Chicago, Ill., produced her wartime "luggage" and began sweetening her coffee. The case is made somewhat on the order of the ordinary vanity case, but is more commodious and has a screw top lid which is opened when the owner is dining.

"This is one of the little ways in which women can help win the war," said Miss Ruttle.

BRILLIANT SOPRANO WITH THE CHAUTAUQA

Miss Bertha Farmer Has a National Reputation in America.

If you were asked to pay $2.00 to sit and listen to Miss Bertha Farner, one of America's most gifted and talented soprano's you would be well repaid for the time and money expended.

Miss Farner made her debut when only seventeen years of age in the same theatre in which Alice Neilson and Tetrazzini made their initial performances. It was with the Trivoli Opera Company of San Francisco.

During her musical career she has appeared as soloist with the Los Angeles Symphony orchestra with the Mancini Opera Company of New York, the San Carlo Grand Opera, the English Grand Opera and other famous organizations. She not only made a name for herself in America but she had appeared with the Opera Company of Nimes, France and in concert in Paris, London, Brussels in fact practically all the large musical centers of Europe. She sang the part of "Manon" before the great Massenet himself and was warmly commended by that great master for the "sweet persuasive voice" with which she sang the church scene.

It is little wonder that Miss Farner has scored such remarkable successes when one considers that she has been trained by such masters of vocal art as Jean de Reszke, Elie Tequi of Paris, Shakespeare of London, and Piccoli of Milan.

She will sing for you during "Chautauqua Week" in the big tent in central park. If you have not time to attend the full programme whatever you do don't miss hearing Miss Bertha Farner for you will be well repaid.

GEN. HUMBERT ON LASSIGNY PLATEAU

(By Webb Miller).

PARIS, Aug. 16 (1.30 p.m.).—Gen. Humbert is now in possession of the entire plateau south of Lassigny, dominating the whole south-western corner of the battle front.

His troops have worked their way to within 2,500 yards (less than a mile and a half) of Lassigny, and are now pushing down the southern slopes of the plateau. The enemy's position from Bray to Lassigny is most unfavourable.

His railways are not available, and transport is greatly congested. Chaulnes is under heavy British fire.

Mrs. L. Van Every has received the following letter, acknowledging receipt of socks:

July 8, 1918.

Dear Mrs. Van Every,—Just a note to let you know that I received a pair of socks knit by you. They are just lovely, and I appreciate your act of kindness very much. There is nothing appreciated more than a pair of socks after walking over the hot, dusty roads.

The ladies of Canada are certainly doing their bit by their acts of kindness to the boys over here.

Thanking you again for the socks, and hoping that your own dear boy will be spared to return to you.—I remain,

O. A. Pearson,
France.

The socks mentioned were sent through the local branch of the Kitchener Club.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir.—Would you kindly allow me space in your most valuable paper to kindly thank Mr. George Welch, of 25 Crescent street, Peterborough, for his courageous conduct in succeeding in saving my son's life from drowning on the occasion of the capsizing of the boat in which my son was enjoying a pleasure trip on, as I have just received the news in your paper sent on to me. I am just discharged from hospital myself. At the same time I wish to send my very deepest sympathy to Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Watkiss, of 256 McDonnel street through the loss they have sustained of their dear son on the same occasion.

I remain, Sir,
Respectfully yours,

Toronto, Aug. 14, 1918.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir: Upon my last visit and service at Chemong village, Mr. Dan Whetoung, Sen., informed me that the Indians of the Methodist church and village had made up for me a freewill offering of eleven dollars, which was presented to me by their worthy S. S. teacher, Mr. Alfred —— with a note stating that "It was made for the purpose of paying my expenses home," after the morning service, conducted by my friend, Rev. James Rutherford, of Toronto, who paid a visit to Wesley Circuit in the interest of the Dominion Alliance at all three appointments, receiving a very good contribution from the Indians of Chemong Village.

In my moving and having no definite place of settlement at the time, I am sorry to say that this was overlooked and I regret was forgotten. I now wish to acknowledge the receipt of their favour of this freewill offering of the dear Indians of the Methodist Society of Chemong Village, who helped so much by their musical abilities in the public services in the church.

Nor would I forget the beautiful Easter decorations of their church, and most helpful musical Easter anthem rendered Good Friday and Easter Sabbath morning by their choir. In their musical services they were a great help to me during my pastorate with them.

Nor must I forget to mention the great kindness and care for my comfort during the hard winter months by Mrs. and Mr. Dan Whetoung, Sr., and each member of his family, who did everything to help me after those long drives in the cold and stormy winter months. May God's blessing rest upon them and upon the services of their new pastor.

GERMANS GIVE GROUND TO FRENCH AT ROYE.

Enemy Threatened With Envelopment Along the Oise.

(By John Degandt).

PARIS, Aug. 16 (4 p.m.).—The Germans are giving away north of the Avre, little by little. The French are progressing and threatening to envelop the enemy at Roye and along the Oise.

The Allies' line encircles Roye, where the strongest pressure is continuing.

The captain had just left the ground at Western Hills Golf Club for Cincinnati when his engine died and the plane took a nose dive, crushing Fitzmorris beneath it.

Automobile Hit By George St. Car

John O'Connor, R.R. No. 6, Peterborough, had rather a bad accident last night at 7.40, when his car was struck amidships by a north-bound George Street car. O'Connor was under the impression that the cars stopped at every corner, whether there were passengers or not, and, accordingly, tried to cross George Street on Simcoe Street. Seeing he could not make it, he tried to turn off, but was struck before he got clear, smashing in the rear right hand corner of the car and also breaking a fender and blowing out a tire. Motorman Downie, who was in charge of the street car, did all in his power to avert the accident. He stopped his car its own length after he saw the car coming towards him. Under the circumstances, he made an exceptionally good stop. The fault was purely O'Connor's, who misunderstood the regulations governing the street radial system.

LIEUT. JAS. MAHON OF CAMPBELLFORD WOUNDED.

CAMPBELLFORD, Aug. 15.—Lieut. James Mahon of Campbellford has been wounded in the big Allied drive in France. He was a Captain in the 20th Halton Rifles before the war. When the 164th Halton and Dufferin Battalions was formed he joined it as a Captain and went overseas with it in command of D Company. In England he reverted to the rank of Lieutenant and went to France to the 116th Battalion, on February 1, 1918.

The Williams New Scale Piano, has been the favorite instrument of so many of the great artists who have visited Canada that its purity of tone is becoming more and more known throughout the world wherever these talented people travel. Hon. N. W. Rowell at Newcastle Tells of Progress of the War

Not In Best Form, According to Report—Many Farmers Were Unable to Leave Harvest Work—Tells of Scenes at the Front Withessed in Recent Visit to France.

NEWCASTLE, Ont., Aug. 14. — Hon. Wesley Rowell, the first of the banquet brigade of Canadian statesmen who have been winning the war in England to make a public appearance in Canada, did it at a patriotic garden party here last night. The Oshawa Band and ice cream cones were rival attractions, and the fact that the band was cheered and the cones all eaten, while the crowd was thanked for listening to Mr. Rowell may indicate the order in which they finished. The proceeds of the party, amounting to $450, went to the Red Cross Fund. On a previous occasion $500 was raised by similar means, but there is no disposition on the part of the management to charge the discrepancy to the sad-faced apostle of uplift.

He Worked Hard.

To do him justice, he worked hard, All the histrionic ability which has helped to make him famous as an emotional actor was thrown into last night's effort. Most of the platitudes which worked overtime since the war began were trotted out for one more trial. Also he assured the audience he had actually been in the front line trenches, and while in France had heard the vibrating engines of a hostile airplane. But the trouble was that except for one incident or two, he had nothing new to tell. His speech might have been written by his own Public Information Bureau.

The Old, Old Story.

He told yet once again of the bravery of Canadian troops, of the splendid work of the Forestry, Construction and Medical branches, and even got down to details far enough to mention by name one brigadier-general, one colonel and a chaplain. If he saw or spoke to a private on his tour he neglected to mention it. Of course, he has an excuse. It was the famous 22nd Battalion of French-Canadians who held the part of the front line he visited and the privates probably spoke only French. Then, again, when he was doing the July 1st sports in France there were 30,000 or 40,000 troops present. If he had mentioned speaking to one of them, look how many others might be jealous. However, it is reassuring to be told by Mr. Rowell that the whole 30,000 or 40,000 were duly sober, clean and fit.

Must Have Reinforcements.

Mr. Rowell was apparently anxious to justify the conscription order-in-Council, which called the farmers' sons to the colours. He dealt at length with the seriousness of the crisis in May and June last. "If the Germans had struck in June with the same force they did in May, no one can tell what might have happened to the channel ports or Paris," he said. And he told how Britain had robbed herself of men to meet that crisis. Despite the food shortage, thirty thousand men from the farms of Britain had been hurried across the channel, and boys of 18½, with but a few weeks' training, had been thrown in agains the highly trained Prussian soldiers. And he made a promise: "So long as I am a Minister," he said, "I shall feel it my duty to see that adequate reinforcements are sent to the forces at the front."

Aliens at Work.

Another remark of Mr. Rowell's indicates that Britain is finding a means of dealing with at least some of her alien enemies. Of 10,000 men working at forestry, under Col. Jones, he said, 5,000 were Canadians and 5,000 were German prisoners working under their own non-commissioned officers. There was, however, no hint from the orator that any action in regard to alien enmies was to be taken in Canada.

Not Up to Form.

It must be admitted that on the whole, Mr. Rowell was not up to his best form. He appeared, in fact, to be a bit over-trained. Probably the severe strain his oratorical powers were put to in England has told on him and he has not had time to recuperate. Besides, he had a dead audience to talk to. It applauded the bravery of our boys, the righteousness of our cause, and the necessity of continuing the struggle till victory is ours and humanity is safe. But it went into no paroxysms of enthusiasm at any stage, and, in fact, did most of its handclapping as if it were part of a day's work. Some of it indeed went off after more ice cream while the peroration was still some pages distant, and did not remain till fervent utterances had given place to a comely maiden in kilts who danced with vivacity and skill.

Part of the crowd, too, seemed a bit disappointed. Some farmers who had promised to come in and fire questions at Mr. Rowell, failed to put in an appearance. They may have been busy with the harvest. And then again the fact that an admission fee was charged may have deterred them. Anway, they were not there and the interest that attached to Mr. Rowell's address was diminished accordingly.

Observing The Rules.

However, the fact remains that Mr. Rowell has come home and, like the English statesmen among whom he has been sojourning, has taken an early opportunity of speaking to his constituents. That he told nothing of why he and others went to England, or what they accomplished while there, has absolutely no bearing on the matter. He has lived up to the rules of statesmanship as laid down by the best authorities. What more can Canadians ask? Especially at a garden party where the admission was only fifteen cents and you could buy a bouquet for a nickel.

Moreover, he left indelibly stamped on the public mind pictures of an earnest and aspiring Minister of the Crown standing by the graves of murdered nurses in France or playing the all-important part of spectation when rival divisions played "the grand old Canadian game of baseball." Those pictures will live long in history.

Didn't Wait For Wesley.

It is only fair to mention that the most successful part of the celebration took place before Mr. Rowell's arrival. That was a parade of decorated vehicles that would have done credit to a more pretentious town. And not the least of its features was a waggon load of farmerettes who looked so natty in their overalls that one would naturally expect a rush of farmers to secure their services.

From all of which it may be gathered that Mr. Rowell may have been a hero in England, but he was only an incident at a Newcastle garden party.

Will Reconsider The Good Roads

migh study the roads for the November meeting.

ALL HAVE AUTOMOBILES.

Most of the County Councillors have their own cars. In fact you could hardly see the Court House yesterday afternoon, such was the clutter of automobiles around it. And the councillors want the best roads that they can get—commensurate with sound financing.

"What is Otonabee's opinion of the Good Roads system?" Reeve Griffith asked the Warden.

"I really don't know," Mr. Anderson replied. "Most of the men I have discussed it with tell us not to adopt it—that we have enough taxes now."

The Belmont reeve suggested that the township might take a vote on a bylaw in order that their sentiment could be learned.

"We are fighting this alone," said Mr. Eason, "and we'll never get anywhere. Objectors never got anything, anyway. If other counties are dissatisfied with the Good Roads system they are not advising us to stay out—they don't tell us they admire our stand."

Mr. Elliott called the Good Roads system an hallucination pictured by the city people. Counties were complaining of its cost, but like hell, it is easier to get into than out of. The farmers to-day were marketing their produce without any loss or handicap from not being in the Good Roads group. Their property was not improved one cent by it.

"We could live as we did 20 years ago," Deputy Reeve Eason said, "but we are not going to. The farmers could drive to town in buggies, but they won't. They have cars."

Mr. Eason declared that the farmers who objected to the Good Roads system should not be taken too seriously. They were the same men who decried automobiles and every other improvement that they didn't happen to own. But once an agent persuaded them to buy a car or machinery, they immediately switch around and became the loudest boosters for them. I know that type. We all do. The woods are full of them."

When the Warden first suggested that the motion be changed, Mr. Eason said "It won't amount to anything if you change it, but everyone will vote for it."

Reeve Nicholls—"I am afraid that as soon as we get good roads the big cars would tear them to pieces."

Mr. Eason—"I don't want the county to go wrong, but if all the others are for Good Roads we don't look very good staying out."

"What are the farmers on the 11th, 12th and 13th concessions of Smith to get under good roads?" Mr. Elliott asked.

Mr. Eason—"They can get colonization roads."

"No, no, no," was the general chorus, and for a few minutes the air was full of words like sticks in a "free for all."

After that melee, the flame of debate died down again, and everything went smoothly to the end.

THE NEWSPAPER advertiser's best motto is: "Keep everlastingly at it."

Mexico Rejects British Protest in Oil Dispute

CANNOT GRANT ANY GREATER RIGHTS TO ENGLISH THAN TO OWN CITIZENS, SAYS NOTE.

Mexico City, via Galveston, Texas. —Genearl Candido Aguilar,, after several months of serious illness, has resumed his duties as Minister of Foreign Affair.

One of the first things he did upon reaching the Foreign Office, was to deliver a note to the British Charge d'Affaires, in answer to a note from the London Foreign Office, dated April 31, in which Great Britain protested against the oil decrees issued by the Carranza government on February 19.

The Mexican note begins by expressing surprise at Great Britain's protest in general and that part of it in particular which says that the London government will hold the Mexican government responsible for losses and damages suffered by British interests because of the decree. General Aguilar's nott ended by saying:

"The Mexican government has firmly decided to respect all foreign interests and to give them full guarantees and co-operation in the development, in conformity with the laws of the country, but in this case it is forced to declare that it shall not accept the British protest, because in doing so it would mean that Great Britain would be in a position to ask greater rights for British subjects in Mexico than are granted to Mexican citizens."

It is understood that the next step of General Aguilar as Minister of Foreign Affairs will be to answer the American note which also protested against these same oil decrees.

Piano Was Used For Storage

Did German Professor's Wife — But She Was Discovered When Adding to Supply.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.— A German professor attached to the local university for several years, recently received a call from a German university, says the New York Sun. He accepted the position and returned to the land of his birth. His wife stayed behind to arrange for shipment of the furniture and household goods. Also, the frau professor was eager to take along some good things to eat which she still could get in the land of comparative plenty, but which were only a memory in the Kaiser's domain.

So the frau professor pried open the rear wall of her piano and filled the interior with a number of hams and sides of bacon. Then she took the covering off her sofa, lifted one of the springs and placed some more hams, some more bacon and some other good things inside, tacking the covering on again after the interior was loaded.

After notifying the express company and the customs authorities, the woman left for Davos, where she tried to forget the pangs of her guilty conscience.

Soon the servant girl, who had been left in charge of the house, notified the frau professor that the customs officers had been there and found everything O.K.

When the frau professor returned to her house and found how easy the customs officials had been duped, greed drowned the voice of precaution. If those men in uniform could not find two hams, they would go more find twenty hams, the frau professor said to herself. So she opened the rear wall of the piano once more, unmindful of the fact that the officers had put seals on the boards that were liable to be pried open. Thus the lady stored away some more food in the interior of her bulky piece of furniture.

When the goods reached the frontier it was discovered that the seals had been broken. An investigation of the piano and other pieces revealed the presence of a large store of provisions.

The frau professor lost all her toothsome wares, and had to pay a fine of more than $1,500. Finally she was arrested, and will have to stand trial for violating Government seals.

Matthews-Blackwell Team Won Another Game Last Evening Score of Fourteen-Twelve

The Orientals Played a Good Game at Times But the Porkpackers Had the Edge—Features of the Game.

A SUMMARY

Last evening the Orientals went down to defeat before the Matthews-Blackwell team. The one redeeming feature for the Orientals was Tudhope's consistent work on first and the way the kids tried to pull the game out of the fire in their half of the ninth. Foley, the Orientals short stop, was brilliant in spots, especially when he made a two-finger catch of Jobbitt's hot one in the first half of the seventh. Cunningham got a run in the first and Ramel in the second innings for the porkmen while the Orientals remained scoreless.

Webb started the fireworks for the Orientals when he got a safety, stole second and reached third on a hit by Tudhope. Both Webb and Tudhope scored on Thorndyke's long single to right field. In the beginning of the fourth Legrow got a life when Thorndyke fumbled his hit to second.

Matthews was next up to bat and made a homer and nearly hit the hat. Art Long got to first on an error, but was caught napping. Jobbitt managed to get on the bases, but Coursey ended it when he fanned.

Webb and Tudhope for the Orientals both got safeties but Thirnbeck fanned, and Bergoine closed the last half of the fifth by fanning. In the second half of the sixth the Orientals evened the game up more when Thirndyke, Collins, McNeeley and Tudhope scored, making the score 11-6.

In the first of the ninth Tudhope had his shoulder badly hurt, but continued in the game.

The Orientals in their half of the game went on the Apache war path, and batted Close right and left. The burleaque was ended after they had garnered four runs.

NOTES OF THE GAME.

"Skinny" Thirnbeck's Happy Hooligan stunts amused the stand.

Frank Jobbitt would make a great back flip circus clown.

When Close ambles around the basts he reminds you of the aborigines of Australia.

Thirnbeck surely is the champion "fouler" of the league.

Bergoine liked the look of the stars much better than the ball and accordingly let that sphere through his mit on more than one occasion.

The pork packers made eleven runs in the first five innings.

Dr. George Grace, the champion cricketer, never made a better score than did the M.-B.

Webb seemed to be a Jonah to Close who walked him nearly every time.

CHAUTAUQUA NEWS

The Five Thousandth delivery of Dr. Russel H. Conwell's "Acres of Diamonds" was heard on May 21st, 1914, at Philadelphia. How many times it has been delivered since is not recorded, but Peterborought people will have the opportunity of hearing this world-famous orator, by attending the Chautauqua on the evening of the sixth day.

Dr. Conwell is easily the most popular lecturer in the world, and while his personal popularity keeps him in constant demand he has been secured for this Chautauqua at Peterborough.

So much esteemed is this famous lecture that it has been translated into eight foreign languages, to enable it to be circulated in print in as many countries.

At the evening of the third day Col. George W. Bain will deliver his lecture, "If I Could Live Life Over." The committee has been wise in securing this famous American for Peterborough. His eloquence is such that he has been called the John B. Gough of to-day. One admirer, finding words to express his appreciation, said that "behind his silver tongue is a heart of gold, while his wit and wisdom are diamonds in their brilliancy." His lecture is one that sums up in with and wisdom the rich experience of a most successful career. It will prove invaluable to the young, inspiring to those in middle life, and a rare treat for all.

The unfortunate accident to Father J. P. McCorry, who was to deliver his famous and beautifully illustrated lecture, "The Story Beautiful," has necessitated his withdrawal from the programme. He is in Chicago for treatment at present. His place will be taken by Dr. Frank Bohn, author investigator and lecturer. Perfectly at home on the platform, Dr. Bohn is an interpreter of life and an advocate of the saving power of knowledge in our present position. He is a scholarly specialist in social history of the United States in the last generation. And he has gained his experience in helping to solve the greatest problems that have come before the people in the last ten years.

Buy your tickets now. Remember that the series of addresses and the wealth of entertainment begin to-day. The friends who have had the grit and enterprise to bring the Chautauqua to Peterborough will be heartened by your support that can best be shown in the tangible way of your taking tickets. $2.00 will admit to all and everything. Get a programme, and you will be at once convinced.

WEAVER ACQUITTED ON FORGERY CHARGE

Magistrate Declares Helen Higgins Does Him Much Harm.

OTTAWA, Aug. 16.—Wilfred Otto Weaver, 287 McLeod Street, was honourably acquitted by Magistrate Askwith in Police Court on the charge of forgery which was brought against him as a result of information given the police by Helen Higgins, 172 Lisgar Street, a clerk in the Estates Branch of the Department of Militia.

Helen Higgins was arrested first, on one charge of forging an endorsation to a Militia Department cheque, and subsequently she admitted forging endorsation to three other cheques. She stated to the police that she endorsed these cheques at the request of Weaver, who is employed as an accountant in the Estates Branch.

In the witness box Helen Higgins stated that it was only July 11 that Weaver told her to endorse the cheques. Major Ralph, head of the department in which Weaver is employed, however, swore that Weaver was away on his holidays from July 3 to July 23, and that Weaver had nothing to do with cheques.

Didn't Believe Girl.

In dismissing the charge against Weaver Magistrate Askwith declared that he could not believe the story told by Helen Higgins.

"I think Weaver has been absolutely innocent and has been done a great harm by this young woman," Magistrate Askwith stated.

Two charges of forgery were read against Helen Higgins and she pleaded guilty to both. They were of forging endorsation to cheques for $32, made out to Mrs. E. S. Hiscocks, and for $5 made out to Mrs. O. D. Westover. When arrested she also had in her possession registration cards bearing the names of these two women, which it is understood she produced at the banks for identification purposes, when she went to cash the cheques. She also forged the registration cards found in her possession, but no charges have been laid against her in connection with this.

Cheques Missing Yet.

Other cheques are still missing and or that purpose Magistrate Askwith reserved sentence for a week. He advised Miss Higgins in the meantime to do all she could to assist the authorities in tracing the other cheques, and also to make good the money she obtained by cashing the first two cheques.

The accused formerly lived in Brockville, and was married some time ago to a man named Morrison, but some time ago she resumed her maiden name.

MAJOR BEITH HAS TO STAND.

Major Ian Hay Beith, author of "The First Hundred Thousand," and "All In It," who has returned to England, had an amusing experience on his war lecture tour last winter when he entered a barber's shop in a small town to have his hair cut. "Stranger in town, sir," the barber asked. The Major replied that he was, and asked "Is there anything going on here tonight?" The barber replied, "There's a war lecture by an English fighter named Hay, but if you go you'll have to stand, for every seat in the hall is sold out." "Really, now," said Major Beith, "provoking isn't it? It's always my beastly luck to have to stand when that chap Hay lectures!"

WEDDING BELLS

DOBBIN—COON.

A quiet wedding was solemnized at the Queen street parsonage on Wednesday, August 14, at 3.30 p.m., when Myrtle Henrietta, daughter of Rev. C. H. and Mrs. Coon, became the bride of Milne G. Dobbin, of Lindsay.

The ceremony was performed by the bride's father, in the presence of the immediate friends of the contracting parties.

The bride, who was unattended, was dressed in white crepe de chine and carried a bouquet of white sweet peas and lilies.

The wedding march was played by the bride's sister, Miss Marion G. Coon, of Ottawa and during the signing of the register, Miss Ruby Coon, stock, of Peterborough, sang very sweetly, "O Promise Me."

After a dainty luncheon the happy couple left for a short holiday in Hamilton and other points. The bride's travelling suit was of blue taffeta, with hat to match.

The groom's gift to the bride was a handsome music cabinet and to the painist a pearl and sapphire pin.

On their return Mr. and Mrs. Dobbin will reside at 7 Melbourne street.

BRIOUX—BURNS.

A quaint, though pretty, wedding was solemnized in St. Vincent de Paul's Church, Roncesvalles Avenue, Toronto, by Rev. Father Minehan, when Theresa M., youngest daughter of the late James J. and Mrs. Burns, of 460 West Marion Street, was united in marriage to Mr. David E. Brioux, son of Thos. Brioux, of Peterborough. The bride was attired in champagne pussy willow taffeta, with georgette crepe, and hat to match; her shower bouquet was of white roses and babies' breath. She was attended by her cousin, Miss Catherine Nolan, in pale yellow georgette crepe with large Leghorn hat, her bouquet being of pink roses. The groom was supported by his nephew, Mr. Alphonse Brioux. Miss McMullen presided at the organ, while at the offertory Miss Maud Collins rendered Dubois' "Ave Marie." After the ceremony the happy couple returned to the home of the bride, where she changed her gown for a suit of navy blue serge and hat of champagne georgette, trimmed with black velvet, immediately after which the young couple left for Montreal and eastern points.

The Creation of Belgian Town in Great Britain

Bit of Pure Belgium Hidden Away in Colliery District of English North Country—6,000 Inhabitants.

BRUTE AROUND SHELL PLANT

There's a bit of pure Belgium hidden away amid the colliery-dotted green of the English north country. It is a town of 6,000 Flemings and Walloons. There is probably no other town in the world like it. It is called Elizabethville, after the Queen of the Belgians, and surrounds a 50-acre shell factory.

The inception and growth of this city has been simpler possibly than might be thought. Back in the summer of 1915, when the British Ministry of Munitions was formed, one of the most difficult problems it faced was that of labour supply.

A proposal was then made to equip one of the munitions factories which were being set up all over England exclusively with Belgian labor. Highly-skilled Belgians were found to be unavailable in England. Further investigations proved that they were not to be had in Holland or France, either. There was but one place left to go for them, and that was the Belgian army. For, in peace-time, Belgian army were the skilled men who had carried them out.

As the result of the international convention thus reached, the requisite number of skilled men were withdrawn form the Belgian army, and the semi-skilled and unskilled men were found almost entirely among the wounded soldiers who had passed through, or were about to pass through, Belgian hospitals.

The town—rows upon rows of concrete cottages —is as thoroughly Belgian as the Queen after whom it is named. There is nothing English about it, except its policemen. Belgian gendarmes were tried for a time, but the Beligans themselves by acclamation asked for the substitution of the British bobby. The post office is run on purely Belgian lines. There is a Belgian market place. Belgian methods of boxing, fencing, and wrestling are used at the recreation hall.

Model Dwellings.

Belgian plays, many of them written by the employes of the factory, are given, and the cinema advertises its programmes in English, Flemish and French. The Belgian rest intervals prevails at the factory, and the Belgian factory custom of innumerable cigarettes is quickly noticed. Hair-dressing saloons, drapery, and shoe-making stores, fancy depots, etc., with their quaint inscriptions, and un-British character of many of the goods on sale, make one forget that one is still in England.

The size of the town is shown by a summary of its buildings; town offices, police and fire station, church schools for 700 children, provision and meat market, twenty-two sleeping hutments, twenty-four hostels, three dining-halls, laundry and bath; hospital with laundry, isolation ward, nurses' pavilion, disinfector, and mortuary; staff hostel, six bungalows for officials, two presbyteries, 532 three-bedroom cottages, 342 two-bedroom cottages ,sewage disposal works, seventeen foremen's cottages, and a cemetery. And the latest addition is a large tract of waste land which has been converted into allotments.

While, from the point of view of housing, the most important buildings are the three-bedroom and two bedroom cottages, one cannot fail to be impressed with the single men's dwellinsg, where thre men sleep in a room and forty-five in a building. These are steam heated and well ventilated, and in the winter are quite comfortably warm.

WELL FED THOUGH RATIONED

The dining-halls afford another instance of well-ordered system. Here 1,200 can be seated at once, and 900 meals have been served in twenty minutes. The men pay two shillings a day, or thirteen shillings odd a week in advance, being provided with tickets. Three meals are served daily ,one hour being allowed for the principal meal in the middle of the day. The diet varies. For breakfast there is bread and butter, honey jam and cheese; for dinner, soup, meat or fish, potatoes, vegetables, rice-cake, and, of course, coffee; for super, potatoes with meat and coffee Tea has not found favor, and porridge for breakfast had to be abandoned. It may be mentioned in passing, too, that every article of diet is strictly rationed just as is the case elsewhere in England.

In their cottage homes, the Belgian women use furniture and pots and pans of every sort, which are the property of the Ministry of Munitions. Each house has its own water- supply and sanitary accommodation. Electric light is universal. From six to eight shillings a week covers ren of house and use of furnishings. In the series of small barracks, single men pay from 3s. 6d to s. 2d. a week.

When one turns from the spotless Belgian homes to the vast, droning black factory, one finds the crowing achievement of this inter-allied enterprise. Its output of shells is certainly up to that of any in the country, and is steadily increasing. While the Belgians, who are paid the piece-rates usual in the district, are earning such incomes as most of them never dreamed of in their Belgian homes.—(Answers.)

Five Hundred Little Patients Victims of German Cruelty

Were Located in a French Hospital—Many of the Children Have No Parents—One Little Boy Explains the Disappearance of Mother.

HAVE SEEN MEN HUNG

PARIS, Aug. 16. — Through villages swarming with troops and packed with ordnance we arrived at an old caserne, which had been converted into the children's hospital of the district. It is in charge of one of the first of America's children specialists.

Here are 500 little patients. This barracks converted into a hospital is full of babies, the youngest being only six days old when I was there. Many of the children have no parents. Others have lost their mothers; their fathers are serving in the trenches. It is not always easy to find out how they came to be orphans; there are such plentiful chances of losing parents who live continually under shell fire. One little boy, on being asked where his mother was, replied gravely: "My mamma, she is dead. Les Boches, they put a gun to 'er head. She is finished. I have no mamma."

Spent Two Days.

The unchildlike stoicism of these children is appalling. I spent two days among them and heard no crying. Those who are sick lie motionless as waxen images in their cots. Those who are supposedly well sit all day brooding and saying nothing. When first they arrive their faces are earth coloured. The first thing they have to be taught is how to be children. They have to be coaxed and induced to play; even then they soon grow weary. They seem to regard mere playing as frivolous and indecorous; and so it is in the light of the tragedies they have witnessed Children of 7 have seen more of horror in three years than most old men have read about in a lifetime. Many of them have been captured by and recaptured from the Huns. They have been in villages where the dead lay in piles and not even the women were spared. They have been present while indecencies were worked upon their mothers. They have seen men hanged, shot, bayoneted, and flung to roast in burning houses. The pictures of all these things hang in their eyes. When they play it is out of politeness to the kind Americans, not because they derive any pleasure from it.

Troublesome Time.

Night is the troublesome time. The children hide under their beds with terror. The nurses have to go the rounds continually. If the children would only cry, they would give warning. But instead they creep silently out from between the sheets and crouch against the floor like dumb animals! That is what they are when first they are brought in. Their most primitive instincts for the beginnings of cleanliness seem to have vanished. They have been fished out of caves, ruined dugouts, broken houses. They are as full of skin diseases as the beggar who sat outside Dives's gate, only they have had no dogs to lick their sores. They have lived on offal so long that they have the faces of the extremely aged. And their hatred! Directly you utter the word "Boche" all the little night-gowned figures sit up in their cots and curse. When they have done cursing of their own accord they sing the "Marseillaise."

Goes to Battle Fields to Establish Her Good Name

NEW YORK, Aug. 17. — Beulah Binford decided a long time ago to play the game of life from the other side. When she was eighteen years old, with yellow curls hanging down her back, she played the role of "the girl in the case" in the most sensational murder case of the decade, that in which Henry Clay Beattie, Jr., of Richmond, Va., was tried for and convicted of the murder of his wife on the Midlothian turnpike of Virginia the night of July 18, 1911.

The object of the curious eyes of thousands wherever she went, she faced about a few weeks after the murderer, her sweetheart, had been put to death and declared she would show to the world that if in a girl's heart there was a desire to be honest and good there was no power that could keep her from being just that.

Beulah Binford, with the same sweet face, if a bit older, with the same yellow hair, with the same determination to live the part of her life that still is before her in the way girls should live, was in New York, and she is on her way to France as a Red Cross nurse.

True, no one knows her as Beulah Binford now. For she is using an assumed name, so it will not be so difficult for her to make her way. She is going to France and help the wounded soldiers of her country.

All she wants now, she made it known when she was found in the throngs of a large hotel lobby, is that when she comes back from the battle-front the world may look upon her and admit the thing that she says she has striven to prove—that Beulah Binford has made good! If that can be brought about she feels she will have won a victory.

TORONTO, Aug. 16. — The local grain market remains quiet, with only an occasional enquiry for a car of oats. Reports of crop cutting are generally favourable. The option markets show but little change, the trading being generally within a narrow margin. Rains in the Western States and Northwest have tended to create a more nervous feeling among the bulls.

Gaffney Reported in Gray Automobile But Search Fails

Commissioner Enright Tells 800 Policemen Man Finding Slayer To be Promoted to Detective.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.— Policemen in the city have been notified to be on the lookout for a gray automobile, displaying a New Jersey license, in which Vincent Gaffney, escaped slayer, was believed to be a passenger. Automobiles throughout the city were stopped by the police, but the elusive Gaffney was not found. Where the information emanated from could not be learned, as the police declined to divulge its source.

Commissioner Enright stated in the gymnasium at Police Headquarters to eight hundred policemen, representing squads from every station in the city, that the policeman capturing Gaffney would be made a first grade detective with a salary of $2,450, a yearly increase of $950 above the pay of a patrolman.

The trial of John Callahan, who tried to escape with Gaffney, but sprained his ankle, was resumed yesterday in General Sessions before Judge Knott. John J. Hanley, warden of the Tombs, testified that the window through which Gaffney escaped, is equipped with bars which may be detached to aid mechanics who have occasion to repair the roof.

TELEGRAM FROM DEPT. OF LABOR TO ARBITRATORS

The Board of Arbitration which has been in session at the Court House since Wednesday morning, receiving the evidence in support of the C.G.E. employees' demands, adjourned yesterday p.m. till Tuesday morning. Both parties (the men and the company) desired time to obtain confirmatory evidence to substantiate certain statements that have been presented.

Judge Snider read a telegram yesterday from the Minister of Labour, directing the Board to give special attention and consideration of the question of classification of the workmen. This point is really the salient contention thus far discussed. During the past three days the Board has listened to protracted expositions and debates on shop customs and practices in the C.G.E. and other factories. At noon yesterday they were still debating the question of the rating of what the men call specialists, as freshly as if the proceedings had just begun.

Mr. F. H. Harper, Canadian Representative of the International Association of Machinists proposed to Col. Watt of Toronto, who with Mr. E. G. Patterson, represent the company, that he nominate a third party, some man familiar with machine shop conditions, to advise or decide the rating of specialists. This suggestion may be followed up next week.

Before the noon adjournment the Board heard the first argument dealing with the brass workers, and at length Mr. Harper agreed to eliminate that designation and call them machinists and specialists as in the case of the machinists themselves.

Judge Snider voiced his position this morning by stating that he was spearing around in the dark trying to find firm ground upon which the company and the men could meet in regard to the disputed question of classification.

Mr. John Noble, representing the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, went to Toronto at noon yesterday.

CROP EXCEPTIONALLY GOOD.

Latest Reports Justify Recent Prediction.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—The latest reports received by the Food Production Department justify the recent prediction of an exceptionally good harvest in England and Wales. They are more optimistic in tone than at any time since the end of the spring. The Daily News representative was informed that the reports all tend to confirm the expectation of a yield equivalent to 40 weeks' supply of foodstuffs.

Under the influence of the late rains the crops generally have recovered from the setback caused by the early summer drought, although in some districts the harvesting operations may be lengthened by a fortnight because the laying and twisting of corn will compel the use of hand labour. The yield of oats is expected to be rather light, but the wheat crop will be a phenomanally large one, while barley will also be pretty good. Potatoes are expected to give an average yield, whereas a few weeks ago they promised a very poor one.

NOTHING CAN COMPARE WITH IT

Mr. Fred Adams, New Rose N.S., writes—"I have tried many medicines for coughs and colds but never found anything to compare to Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. We have had the greatest never fails to relieve a cough and loosen satisfaction with this medicine for it it up."

FREAK WIND STORM DAMAGES WARSHIP.

Was Rescued When Only a Few Feet From Bank.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Serious damage was caused Thursday by a freak wind storm which swept a section of the Hudson River around 225th Street, and a part of the upper west side.

A foreign warship anchored in the Hudson, dragged her anchor in the gale and was swept helplessly toward the rocks on the New York shore. Six tugs steamed full speed to the war vessel's assistance in response to signals for help. They threw lines to the helpless ship when she was in shallow water only a few feet from the bank and dragged her out into the river. Considerable damage was done by the wind to the war vessel's super structure, but her officers reported it could be repaired without trouble.

The fury of the wind was felt especially along Riverside Drive, where it swept against the towering apartment houses which line the east side of the thoroughfare. Large sections of roofs were ripped from one or two of the buildings.

ELLICE FARMER COMMITTED.

Stratford, August 15. — George C. Schmidt, an Ellice farmer, was committed for trial in court on a charge of harbouring two deserters, Frederick Schmidt, his son, and John Pehlke. Schmidt's house was searched on Monday night. Pehlke was captured, and Schmidt escaped, but came to the city on Tuesday and gave himself up. Schmidt was remanded till Friday, when Pehlke will be brought from London to give evidence.

The Woman Who Changed

By JANE PHELPS

BABY'S FIRST OUTING

CHAPTER CXLVI.

The first time I was able to take my baby out, I was so proud and excited that George declared if I didn't behave, he wouldn't let me go, that he and Kenneth would go without me.

I suppose every mother thinks her baby the sweetest, prettiest baby in the world. I am sure I would have scorned the idea that there ever could be so pretty a one as my little brown-eyed Kenneth. I think George felt exactly as I did, even if he did make fun of me.

We stopped at Evelyn's on our way home. Kurts' mother was there, and while agreeing that Kenneth was all that was desirable in so young a child, she warned me not to give up all my time to the baby.

"Young wives with their first babies are apt to forget that they have a husband, or that they owe it to themselves not to neglect other duties. Don't fall into that error. Love and care for your baby all you want to; but remember that Mr. Howard has some rights also."

I was astonished to have her talk so to me. She had made such a fuss over Evelyn's baby. But when I spoke to Evelyn about it, some days after, she said her mother-in-law had talked just the same to her—that she had cautioned her not to neglect Kurts, or her home and social duties. When I repeated what she had said to George, he returned:

"She's a very level-headed woman. Because you love Kenneth, it is no reason why you should stop loving me."

"Why—whoever heard of such a thing! 'Stop loving you'—that's not what she said. She meant not giving you as much time as before and"—

"Well I said it, and I do not intend to be shoved aside for that young rascal. Remember that, please, Mrs. Howard!" His tone was light, but I had a feeling that he really meant what he said.

FOOLISH DEVOTION.

As the months passed and my boy grew more interesting, I could scarcely drag myself away from him. He was so cunning, and he seemed to love me so dearly. He satisfied that longing for expressed affection that I had felt since my marriage. He was such an affectionate little fellow.

"I am glad he is affectionate," I said to Evelyn.

"Why?"

"Oh, George is so undemonstrative, and it is hard for a woman to take everything for granted when she is married to a man who never shows that he cares."

"Don't marry that baby off just yet!" she laughed, then, "I'll bet a pair of gloves that Mr. Howard cares just as much for you as if he made a fuss over you, Helen. I have seen him look at you with such a proud sort of look in his eyes."

"I know—occasionally. When I please him he does look that way, and once in a while he acts loving. But I would give anything in the world if he was like Kurts, and would give me a bear hug, and dance me around the room kissing and teasing me as I have seen Kurts do with you. Sometimes I fairly ache to have him do something like that. I don't mind so much now that I have the baby, tho. When I want to be loved and petted, I just hug him so I almost hurt him, and he loves me back in the same way, his little arms tight around my neck."

"You are worse than I was when Helen was his age. You are perfectly foolish over him. If he isn't spoiled, it won't be your fault."

"I'll be strict when he gets older."

"I see you being strict with him. That's a joke!" Evelyn returned with a laugh.

DISTURBING THOUGHTS.

I wondered, after she left, if I was foolish to be so entirely devoted to my baby. I concluded I was not; that he was MY baby, and I was going to be just as silly as I wanted to—if it was silly.

Then one evening as I sat alone sewing on a dainty dress for him—I loved to make his clothes—it came to me with a sort of shock that George was again staying out or going out nearly every evening. He had remained home with me often, in the months before baby came, and afterward he had not gone out as frequently as had been his custom when we were first married.

I dropped my work. Where was he? WHY had he begun to again spend his evenings away from home and—me? Julia Collins was eliminated. She was married and lived in Chicago. Was there someone else? Had he found some other entertaining woman with whom he now spent the time he used to devote to her? The thought was disturbing.

I tried to sew again, but found I could not put my mind on my work, so took up a magazine and tried to read. I glanced at the clock. It was a little after eleven. I must go to bed. He would not like it if I was waiting up for him. It had become a habit, since baby came, to go to bed very early unless we had guests or had gone out. I recalled that I had no idea what time George had been coming in. I had been tired and gone directly to sleep.

But although I went to bed I could not sleep. I tossed and tumbled until after one o'clock. When finally I dropped into an uneasy, unrestful sleep, George had not yet come in.

WAR BEGAN IN APRIL, 1913

Huge War Credit Was in That Year Voted in Germany and Supported by Socialists.

When did the war begin? April, 1913; not August, 1914, as the press always has it, writes Charles Edward Russel in Harper's. The real declaration of war was made by the German reichstag when it struck observing Europe dumb and chill by passing, an extraordinary war credit of $250,000,000; and to that act of belligerency in a time of profound peace the socialists in the reichstag gave practically their support.

All men in the world accustomed to make upon the day's news an intelligent diagnosis must have gasped and stared at this portent. Unless Germany deliberately planned now to bring down upon mankind the war her armament had silently threatened these many years, there was no good reason for this perilous saber rattling; certainly none appeared in the state of Europe. Yet the socialists seemed to be for it; that was the incomprehensible fact.

August Bebel, then still active, was the ablest and most famous of their leaders, and criticism from many lands seemed to goad him into a defense. It was of a nature to chill the last hope in any friend of peace. Two reasons he gave for the reichstag's action. One was that President Poincare of France, who had been but newly elected, was a warlike and dangerous man, and no one could tell to what lengths he might go. The other was that in the Balkan wars the Turks, taught by German officers, had been beaten by the Serbians, taught by French.

The judicious might grieve indeed when they came upon such an offering from such a source, and anybody able to read might see that war was close at hand.

ANGRY AT BEING DISTURBED

Old Gentleman Vastly More Annoyed at Constable Than He Was at Hun Air Raiders.

"He wasn't half angry," said a constable to me, smiling reminiscently as he cast his eye over what remained—mostly top story only—of an old-fashioned house which had suffered in a recent air raid. "You should have heard his language!"

"Curious thing," I said, "the top floor doesn't appear to be touched."

"Yes, that's where he was," said the constable. "Of course, we thought he was a casualty. We cleared away the rubbish, and somehow or other got up to his rooms with an ambulance and the doctor. The door was closed, so we started prying it open. That's when the fun started.

"The door was flung open, and there stood the old gentleman with a big book in his hands, his 'specs' on, and in a proper temper. I just caught a glimpse of a cosy armchair drawn up to a blazing fire.

"'What the —— does this mean?' he says. 'Haven't I been disturbed enough this evening? Get out of it all of you.' And without troubling to shut his door, he went back and sat down with his book beside the fire, muttering most awful. It gave me the biggest shock of the raid."—London Mail.

Vanity.

There is a stirring of the spirit captive in the worn mesh of the body. People are breaking down under the tyranny of material possessions. There was never a time when women's intelligence was so eager and inspirational; never a time when men were so weary of metal and meals and miles. It is all clear to a prophetic understanding that we are nearing the end of our lessons in three dimensions and five senses.—Will Levington Comfort.

CAPTURED ENEMY MOTOR.

French Airman Figured In Very Daring Exploit.

On the occasion of the bestowal of the rosette of an officer of the Legion of Honor upon the famous French airman, Nungesser, who gained 35 to 36 victories, the Paris newspapers recounted some of the deeds which have earned this brilliant officer the honor. The following is one of the most picturesque of his adventures:

Nungesser gained the Military Medal on Sept. 3, 1914, when he was a Hussar. His detachment had been surrounded, and Nungesser carried his officer, who was wounded, into shelter.

Then with two infantrymen he attacked a 40 horse-power Mors motor-car, containing four German officers, including a colonel. In the fight which ensued a shot from the car went right through Nungesser's hat, but he succeeded in killing his adversaries, and, changing clothes with one of them, jumped into the car with his comrades and regained the French lines.

It was thought at first that he was a spy and he was taken before the general officer commanding, to whom he delivered the papers he had found on the Germans, which included a map indicating the route by which the Germans intended to march on Paris.

The delighted general invited the hero to lunch, and made him a present of the Mors car, with the words: "You are a Hussar. You have captured a Mors. You will henceforth be a 'Hussard re la mort' (a death's head Hussar). The nickname has stuck to Nungesser.

The papers point out that Nungesser has probably been wounded more times than any other airman, as he has 17 wounds to his credit.

Cramps and Pains In The Stomach

QUICKLY CURED BY

DR. FOWLER'S EXTRACT OF WILD STRAWBERRY.

Mrs. J. Fawcett, Hopewell Hill, N. B., writes: "I am writing you of my experience with Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry.

Last summer I was taken so very sick with cramps and pains across my stomach that I sent for the doctor. He said I had summer complaint and gave me some medicine, but it did me very little good. As I was reading your B. B. B. Almanac, I saw Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry advertised, so I asked my sister to go to the store and get me a bottle, and before I had taken all of it I was a well woman, and have not had the slightest return of the trouble since. I cannot say enough for your valuable medicine, and always keep a bottle in the house."

You run absolutely no risk when you buy Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, as it has been a standard remedy on the market for the past 72 years. Ask for "Dr. Fowler's" and insist on getting it, as the cheap imitations are dangerous to your health. Price, 35c. Put up by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

How Your Neighbor Ends Her Corns

HAVE you noted how uncommon corns are nowadays? That pained look—that slipped-off shoe—are not very often seen. The reason lies in Blue-jay, which millions have adopted. An easy, gentle, scientific way to forever end a corn.

Those corn-free folks don't pare corns. They don't merely pad them. They don't use old-time treatments, harsh and mussy.

When a corn appears they wrap it with a Blue-jay, then forget it. It never pains again.

In two days, usually, the corn disappears. Only rare, tough corns need a second application.

The way is simple, easy, quick. It is right and scientific. A noted chemist evolved it. And it is made by a world-famed surgical dressing house. Don't keep paring and protecting corns. They are deformities—remove them.

Learn how Blue-jay does it. It will be a revelation. After that test you will never again let a corn annoy you.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

An Old Hero's Story

By F. A. MITCHEL

An old Frenchman, a veteran of the Franco-Prussian war, who had been in America long enough to speak English as he would if it were French, told me this story over a glass of French wine raised in California:

Eet was in ze beginning of ze war when ze Prussian haf not yet conquer ze French people and we do not think zey will overrun ze country and dictate terms of peace in Paris. I was with General le Fevre, who commanded a brigade near ze frontier. We have ze railroad and ze locomotif and ze cars, but when ze Prussians cross ze border all ze employees of ze road run away.

In ze evening just before sunset an officer ride up to ze camp of ze Ninety-eighth regiment of ze line and say:

"Any of you men locomotif engineer?"

I have been locomotif engineer before I enlist in ze army, so I shake my hand in ze air. Ze officer he took notice and he call for me to come to him. I go with him to General le Fevre's headquarters, and ze general ask me how much I know about locomotif, and after I tell him he say to me:

"I send a thousand men to ze other terminal of zis railroad at once. Zere is one company zere and ze captain telegraph zat ze Prussians are coming to occupy ze high ground zere, but eef he have a thousand men he can hold eet till General Bazaine send a large force. Eet is sixty miles to go, and you must tak ze train zere in leetle more than an hour. Eef you git zere before ze Prussians you may save France. Zey are six or seven miles from ze place and march on foot.

I say, "Yes, general, I tak ze men zere in one hour if ze locomotif will pull it so fast as zat."

It was ver' dark when we start. Ze moon only leetle crescent, nearly gone down. We run from north to south, ze same way as ze border line between France and Prussia. We do not know if ze Prussians haf advanced so far as ze railroad. Eef they haf zey fire into ze train, zey try to throw it off the track, zey do all zey can to keep us from going on.

My engine ver' good engine, one of ze best of eets kind. I run sixty miles an hour, sometimes more, sometimes less. When I come to ze curves I slow down leetle bit, but make eet up when I have a straight road before me. A few Prussian cavalrymen, ze advance of ze Prussians, have come so far as ze railroad, and zey put obstructions on ze track. Suddenly I look ahead and see a tree felled on the rails. I reverse, zen shut my eyes to wait for ze smash. Eet does not come, only a leetle bump.

When an engineer runs into ze dark night he feels like Columbus when he sail into ze dark ocean. I nevaire know when I round a curve, but I run into a big rock or some othaire obstruction zat kill me and wreck ze train behind me. I see specter all ze time. Suddenly a great black somet'ing seem to spring up on ze track right before me. I reverse, but before I come to a full stop I see zat it ees nothing but a leetle bug which haf fly on ze glass before ze headlight.

All at once I hear a cracking above ze noise of ze train, and bullets whistle through ze cab. Some Prussian horsemen fire zere carbines at us. But zey do leetle damage, nothing but break my right arm. So I cannot hold ze throttle with zat arm. But what for I want two arms when one will do as well, except for sudden reverse, and by zat time I come within about ten miles of ze end of ze journey? Nevairezeless I call ze fireman, who come and look ovaire my shoulder.

Ze Prussians were by zat time ver' near ze point we wish to reach, and we both approach at an acute angle. Zey hear ze rattle of our train, and we hear zere huzzas. By gar, we have to stop to mke away ties zem scouts put on ze track, and while we make no sound we hear zere tramp it double quick. Zen we hear a gun, and I think we too late. Ze Prussians must be attacking ze post. But I go on, and pretty soon I come to a leetle earthwork our men haf thrown up beside the railroad and see that they have a gun there and have dropped a shell into ze Prussian advance.

In a few minutes we reach our point I whistle down ze brakes, ze train stop, and our men jump out and run up to ze top of ze hill, where ze French have work two, t'ree days on ze fortifications.

Zat was ze end of my work. I get surgeon to fix my arm and am ready with my musket to receive the Prussians when zey come. Zey have twice as many men as we, but we have very strong position and no trouble to hold out till Marshal Bazaine send large force.

When I get back to my command my general he throw his arms about me and hug me like a bear. He say to me: "You have done great service. You shall be a captain; you shall have a medal. I will report what you have done to the empereur."

Pouf! What was it all worth? Ze Prussians march right on to Paris, and after the capitulation our people pay big ransom to get zem out, besides giving our beautiful provinces Alsace and Lorraine. Some day when we get strong we tak zem back. But what good zat do me? I'm too old now to fight, and by zat time I sleep under ze sod.

French Labor Shortage.

The lack of labor has become more acute in almost all the vital industries of France. There are many soldiers of the old classes in the French army, men 40 years of age or more, whose usefulness at the front is a question open to debate. Agitation has been going on since the time when American participation in the war made the demand for men less acute at the battle front to relieve the old Poilus. Early in 1917 the doubtful privilege of an honorable discharge was granted to carefree fathers of six or more children. The real problem before the chamber of deputies is whether to take up the question of the old classes in a large spirit or whether to continue to make slight concessions to the demands of their constituents.

MYSTERY HOVERS OVER LAKE

Body of Water in Central Africa Has Most Curious Effect on Minds of Travelers.

Cold and gray are the waters which Lake Tchad spreads over the lowlands of central Africa. The traveler in Africa finds the mystery of the dark continent more haunting and unfathomable here than in the baffling mazes of the jungle or in the silent smile of the sphinx. Heavy winds toss the shallow waters about and whisper their secrets through the reeds. But the lake makes no answering confidences. It stretches on and on, measuring its miles of surface in sweeping wave lengths.

As far as the eye can see ahead are the reeds and rushes reaching up through the water in tangled masses. Here and there the line of the gray expanse is broken by slender islands bearing up a few round-topped native huts, outlined dimly against the skyline. The effect is that of a painting seen through gray glasses, reducing the whole to a low key. It is in the grayness that the lake's effect of mystery lies, the grayness that hovers dull and cheerless over waving reeds.

The traveler gazing across Lake Tchad for the first time feels the thrill of discovery. The knowledge that he is not the first to stand upon the banks does not dispel the feeling of entering the most shut-off place in central Africa.

The Culprit.

A schoolteacher complained to the principal one day that one of the big boys was flirting outrageously with the music teacher, who came in once a day. The principal spoke severely to the class and ended by saying that out of consideration for the feelings of the culprit he would not name him in public. At the close of the session, however, he was to come to the principal's office for an interview.

Yes, you guessed it. All the boys in the class showed up.

Her Party Speech.

Lucille was a carefully brought up little girl of five, and she returned in high glee from her first party. "I was a good girl, mamma," she announced, "and I talked nice all the time."

"Did you remember to say something nice to Mrs. Applegate just before leaving?" asked her mother.

"Oh, yes, I did," responded Lucille. "I smiled at her and said: 'I enjoyed myself very much, Mrs. Applegate. I had lots more to eat than I 'spected to have.'"

LIKE BOLT FROM HEAVEN'S BLUE

A happy discovery of Cincinnati chemist interests women here

Your high heels have put corns on your toes and calluses on your feet, but why care now?

A genius in Cincinnati discovered a magic ether compound and named it freezone. A quarter ounce of this freezone can now be had at any drug store for a few cents. Apply a few drops on your tender, aching corn or callus. Instantly the soreness disappears and shortly you will find the corn or callus so shriveled and loose that you lift it off with your fingers.

Just think! You get rid of a hard corn, soft corn or a corn between the toes, as well as hardened calluses for a few cents and without suffering one particle, without the slightest irritation of the surrounding skin. Just a touch of this marvelous freezone on a sore, troublesome corn gives instant relief.

SHAVES IN STRANGE PLACES

Daredevils Who Remove Their Beards Under Difficulties.

Konschel, an Austrian aviator, performed an unprecedented feat a few days ago for a bet, when he shaved himself while circling the Vienna flying ground at an altitude of 3,000 feet. During the operation — after the preliminary and comparatively easy process of lathering was concluded—he had to steer with his feet as he required the left hand to hold his cheek, while with the right he wielded the razor.

On more than one occasion the celebrated Blondin undertook successfully a similar achievement while standing upon a rope stretched across a giddy gulf. Indeed, he once performed this item of the toilette while carrying a passenger on his back - a passenger who in this case must have been himself a cool-headed gymnast, as after his supporter had finished he in his turn took the razor in hand and removed a day's growth from his chin.

Every now and again some daring Figaro has gained bold advertisement by exercising his calling in the unrestrained presence of the king of beasts. During the stay of Myers Circus at Huddersfield a local barber wagered $25 that he would enter a cage of lions and shave their trainer within a space of five minutes. He won his bet with two minutes to spare. Even more foolhardy was a Norwich (Eng.) barber, who, in similar circumstances, shaved the trainer at Day's Menagerie, for, on one of the lions approaching somewhat too near, he gave the inquisitive carnivore a taste of the lather-brush.

Guillaume Duprat, Bishop of Clermont and founder of the College of Jesuits, at Paris, narrowly missed being shaved in his own cathedral. Duprat was the possessor of a beard so magnificent and luxurious in its growth as to awaken envy in all clerical hearts—envy even in those of his canons, who, so far from being proud of their chief's hirsute adornment, assembled in full chapter and resolved upon its removal. Preparations were made, and when next the bishop appeared in the choir a procession of ecclesiastical dignitaries, headed by the dean, advanced down the aisle carrying barber's basin, hot water, soap, and razor. The bishop, however, divined their intention, and promptly taking to his heels, managed to reach his castle of Beauregard, where, after a brief illness, he died of chagrin at the indignity which he had so narrowly escaped.

Louis I. of Bavaria issued an ordinance in 1838 forbidding citizens under any pretext whatever to wear moustaches, and directed the police to see that his will was promptly obeyed. Moustaches disappeared with astonishing celerity, the authorities having only on rare occasions to exert their power, which they then did with drastic promptitude, as when, on receipt of information that a wealthy banker, who had not yet complied with the order, was enjoying a bathe in the Isar, they procured a boat and, having supplied themselves with the necessary impiements, overtook the swimmer, whose moustache they cut off there and then while he trod water.

Not Equal to It.

They had not been married very long, but she had grown cold and listless; so one evening, after she had yawned about seventeen times, he said:

"You seem to be so cold and indifferent, Malvina. Have you forgotten those happy days when I was paying you my addresses?"

"I should think I haven't! I should think I haven't forgotten those happy days. I never had less than three fellows every evening calling on me."

"But, dear, haven't you got me to pay you attention now?"

"Yes, I suppose I have. You are doing the best you know how; but you don't flatter yourself that you are equal to three, do you?"—Stray Stories.

Her Strategy

By MILDRED WHITE

As the new doctor passed down Main street, admiring glances and friendly greetings came to him from every side. Though he had but lately come to fill the place of a former classmate gone to war, Bruce MacDonald had quickly gained the confidence of the community. But in one manner he disappointed, positively he persisted in refusing all social invitations.

His life was to be one of duty, not pleasure, he announced. And interested maidens lamented.

There were few desirable men left in the suburban town, and they had counted much upon the diversion of his brilliant companionship. The record of "brilliancy" preceded him. Had not his pictured face appeared in city papers in connection with various worthy activities? But all unheeding, the new doctor passed indifferently upon his way, that is—until his foot stumbled against some object lying directly in his path on Main street. Curiously, he stooped to pick it up, the crumpled object was a woman's rubber. Small, high-heeled and new it was, some one had evidently dropped it, perhaps entering an auto, and had not noticed its loss. Doctor MacDonald turned the rubber over in his hand, there upon the white lining were inked initials and an address. J. T., he deciphered, 24 Main St., West; 24 must be—why, it was just opposite. It would delay him but a moment to run up the steps and leave the shoe at the door.

A maid opened the door, but when he would have delivered the rubber into her care, she withdrew, leaving the young doctor standing in a sunny reception hall. But he had not long to wait, down the stairway came swift feet, a girl stood before him. Absorbed, as was his custom, in thought of professional duties, he might have neglected to observe this young woman's many and evident charms, had she not delayed him by professing doubt as to the rubber's ownership.

"This address is plainly written upon the inside," he told her. But in that moment of delay, her eyes twinkling with some hidden merriment, caught and held his own bewilderingly.

"So kind of you to trouble," she murmured.

"No trouble at all," the doctor returned, and still lingered in the hall.

Confusedly he picked up the morning paper lying upon the vestibule floor and handed it to her.

The girl gave a little cry of distress. "Oh, do you see the heading?" she asked. "More of our boys leaving for the front. Isn't it all—dreadful?" Her sympathetic face questioned him. "And you," she said, "are you—?"

The doctor shook his head. "I am a little beyond the age limit," he answered, "and I am taking Doctor Smith's place here during his absence."

"Yes, I know," the girl replied, she smiled, "we soon learn all about strangers." Impulsively she put forth her hand. "I am glad to meet you," she went on frankly cordial, "you see, your fame had traveled before you. We have been counting greatly upon your help in the Red Cross lectures, and all that."

Doctor MacDonald was embarrassed, it was such public affairs to which he had been obliged to give resolute refusal. "My regular work takes every moment of my time," he murmured.

The owner of the little rubber was plainly disappointed, also she was determined to be cheerful in her disappointment.

"Oh, we shall no doubt find some one else," she said. Her bright gaze fell upon him. "Though of course we would have preferred our own resident physician."

The doctor hesitated with his hand upon the door knob, the charming girl hesitated, looking down upon her recovered shoe.

"If you had not found this," she remarked, "I might have been obliged to remain home from tonight's Red Cross meeting. Good morning, doctor, and thank you."

Suddenly the door opened from outside and a tall youth burst into the room.

"Great Scott!" he exclaimed.

"Billy!" cried the girl, she gave him a little shake. "Doctor MacDonald," she introduced, "this is my brother."

The doctor's face expressed amused astonishment at the boy's continued perplexing stare. But when he had gone, that youth dropped in mock helplessness into the nearest chair.

"You are a wonder, Josie," he said. "How did you do it? Here it was only last night that I bet you a five pound box of chocolates you couldn't get acquainted with Doctor MacDonald. You came right back, that you would bet he'd call at the house in a day or two, and here he is, first thing this morning. 'Course, now he has met you, we know the rest of the story. The chocolates are yours, but by George! how in the world did you do it?"

"Billy," reproved his sister, the dancing light of her eyes had given way to an unusual softness, "I do not want your candy. He—he is far too nice, to bet about."

And a few moments later, Doctor MacDonald, with a like softness in his own keen eyes was at the telephone.

"As to that Red Cross meeting this evening Mrs. Benson," he was saying, "I have reconsidered. You may count upon me sure, to be there."

Democracy.

An endless line of drafted and enlisted men with not a stitch to their backs was slowly passing through a room where important-looking men gave each one a glance or a prod, or listened to his heart or lungs, or looked to see if he had fallen arches, and so on. The men were of many ages, shapes, sizes, dispositions and nationalities, Papadoupoulos was followed by Lafferty, and he by Cohen, and he by Jones, and he by Bogdanski. It was a typical melting-pot crowd. At the beginning of the line stood a man who merely asked questions — singularly foolish ones too, as many thought. In fact, they were very foolish indeed, but if you happened to be subnormal mentally it was very likely that you would give yourself away when you tried to answer them. That is what they were for, and the questioner, of course, was a psychologist.

He asked the track-walker the usual series of questions, and the poor fellow was bewildered somewhat, but managed to get through without calamity. Then the examiner turned to the next man, a singularly uninteresting specimen.

"What was your job?" asked the psychologist, in a manner meant to be reassuring.

"Such-and-such a university faculty," replied the man calmly, "department of psychology."

There were mutual grins of commiseration.

The examiner found that this enlisted man had worked a great deal with mental tests, so he followed the man along, as the line of men slowly made its progress down the long room, and the final turning of the column arrived just as they were discussing the psychological analysis of behavior differences in children!

Then the examiner began making a hurried retreat back to his post at the other end of the room, upon which the track-walker turned around with pained and sincere bewilderment in his eyes and expression.

"Holy smoke!" moaned he: "that was the worst blame high-brow talk I ever heard in my 'ife! What was it about? Latin?"

"If I knew as much junk as dat," quoth No. Three, who in private life operated a push-cart. "I'd git me a better job 'n bein' a soldier."

No. Four, a typical business man, merely chuckled.

Electric Lights.

An English authority assures us that we need not be afraid that the ultra-violet rays in the electric light will harm our eyes, for the reason that, since glass of all kinds is opaque to these rays, no form of incandescent lamp having a glass bulb can emit them. Nor can any arc lamp or mercury vapor lamp be harmful which is so inclosed.

Can't Even Have "Near-Beer."

Germany's brewers hoped this year to produce a beer substitute that should really resemble beer, but the Prussian minister of finance has issued a decree that puts an end to the dream of the foaming stein.

A new process has been patented by which near-beer was to be made from beetroot, hops, yeast and water. Many breweries had already installed machinery required under the patent.

The minister of finance has decided that the sugar of the beetroot, upon which the substitute depends for alcohol, cannot be spared for beer. Beet, he says, are badly needed for manufacture of sugar, dilution of jam and mixing of coffee substitutes.

Very Heavy Artillery Fighting West of Roye

The Allies Are Creeping Nearer To Important Position

Thompson-Gillespie Alliance to Trim Reeves Who Are Against the Ontario Good Roads System

Rumour Reaches County Council That War is to be Decided in January on Those Who Refuse to Pledge Support to the Policy—November Session May Forestall the Promised Ructions.

GOOD ROADS

The municipal elections in Peterborough townships next January promise a degree of interest that is usually absent from the unexciting duty of choosing a reeve and a handful of councillors. Occasionally some local question of economy or management, when personalities refuse to ruffle, develops a contest that resounds along the concession lines, but during the past four years, at any rate, parochial differences have been lost in the shadow of war.

This year, it is rumoured, the Provincial Good Roads system will be introduced as an issue into every township. Mr. James Thompson and Mr. George A. Gillespie, the representatives in the Legislature of East and West Peterborough respectively, will join forces, it is said, in support of candidates for the County Council, who will be pledged to lead Peterborough to the vacant chair that has been so long waiting for her in the Good Roads household. These two M.P.P.'s, supported by spell binders from the Department of Public Highways, will go up and down the townships, holding the county before the farmers as the blacksheep in the Ontario fold.

Reeve Matheson stated on Thursday afternoon that he heard, on good authority in Havelock, the occasional resting place of Mr. Thompson when he finds time to get away from his interests in Toronto and New Ontario, that every candidate for reeve next January will be asked for his promise to vote "Yea" whenever the Good Roads question is introduced in the County Council. Mr. Thompson will not find it necessary to threaten many of the candidates in the East Riding. He has a following down there, it is said, that eats out of his hand. It is not suggested that any of the present members of the Council are so-called Thompson men. Perhaps they are; and in any case they may not be so sure that Mr. Thompson's arguments in this cause will be as potent as the glad-hand that wins Provincial elections.

However, Reeve Matheson wasn't communicating a State secret when he reported the rumour from the railroad town. It has been understood for some time that the fiat has gone forth that Peterborough has been coaxed long enough. It is now time to go and get her. And to deliver her into the hands of the Good Roads Department, the surest method is to get rid of the present recalcitrants.

In justice to Mr. Thompson, it should be said that the issue is not a political one, but old political associations should help some in the east. If the present expectations are fulfilled there is bound to be a few interesting debates, especially in the townships now represented by "hold-out" reeves. The farmers will be fully acquainted with both sides of the question, the smooth places and the ruts in the Good Roads system, and in the meantime the Council is going to imprint maps of the county in its separate minds, and prepare to dispose of the project, once and for all, at the November sessions. All of which is a guarantee that the countryside will understand the details of the Provincial system as never before.

As already reported recently, the Reeves of this county want good roads but they don't want them at a premium. It is but natural that any of the present Reeves who happen to live near or directly on any main road that would receive first attention under the Good Roads scheme are stronger advocates of the Provincial system than those buried on back forties. Generally speaking, the councillors are entirely happy in their isolation from the rest of the Province.

If the conditions of membership in the Good Roads fraternity were altered a trifle, Peterborough would have been long ago knocking at the door. Just now the Council has its foot on the bottom step, and in November may climb the rest of the way and walk right in with their hand out for the welcome that goes to the prodigal and the lost sheep that has been found. In that event, the Thompson-Gillespie entente would find no townships to conquer, and most of the present Reeves would be back again probably expecting a banquet from the Motor League and a big joy-ride from the Kawartha Park Association.

WAR SUMMARY

NEW YORK, Aug. 17—The Associated Press summary this morning says:—Roye the central bastion of the German defense line from Peronne to Noyon which has withstood the allied thrusts for nearly a week is menaced seriously by the advancing French, British and Canadian troops and its fall would appear to be a probability within the next few hours. With town in allied hands the southern end of German line at least undoubtedly would have to retire, although the northern end through Chaulnes to Perone would be affected. Allies are now but scant one and one quarter miles west of town while they are pressing eastward in north and in south.

Along front of nearly nine miles north and south of Avre, which flows through Roye allies have pushed back enemy in Stubborn fighting. The most notable advance was made on front of three miles in centre by French and Canadian troops who now are fighting in line through Goyencourt, St. Mard Les Treot and Lacourt.

Ald. Dobbin Assumes Fuel Position Until Vacancies Are Filled

Deprived of its Fuel Commission, the city has practically been forced to call in Ald. Dobbin to fill the position until the wreckage has been cleared away and a new start made. Mr. Malcolm Campbell is the only Commissioner who has accepted the Council's appointment, but he is unable to assume the duty for the reason that the by-law required three Commissioners.

Ald. Dobbin held a conference with the coal men on Wednesday night, at which an important question was discussed and plans laid for meeting a situation that might lead to a considerable decrease in the city's receipts of coal.

OUTING FOR PETERBOROUGH MUSIC DEALERS.

Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Mason and Master Melbourne were the guests Thursday afternoon of the Music Dealers' Association of Peterborough. The party, numbering about thirty, left Peterborough about 2.30 by motor for South Beach, from which place they went by boat through the beautiful waters of Stoney Lake. Then a most excellent fish dinner was served by Mr. Brooks at his summer hotel. After a number of games the party returned to Peterborough. Mr. and Mrs. Mason arrived home Friday morning.—Lindsay Post.

Camp DeCesar, a mile west of Roye, has been captured while the Midian trench and Pressis-De-Roye, less than a mile southwest of Lassigny, have been occupied. A number of prisoners and a great quantity of material were taken. The enemy is reported to be preparing for evacuation of the Roye-Lassigny-Noyon salient. German pioneers are said to be constructing another Hindenburg line.

It is indicated, the paper adds, that German pioners and labourers are at work behind the German front lines on a new Hindenburg line. The German position in Roye is serious. Not only are the Allies a mile and one quarter west of the town, but the roads leading out of it toward Peronne, Nesle and Noyon are under fire of the allied guns.

The Tanks Played An Important Part

Went Ahead and Cleared Out Wire, Machine Gun Nests and Other Obstructions.

WITH THE CANADIAN FORCES (By J. F. B. Livesay, Canadian Press Correspondent), Aug. 17.—All ranks of the Canadian forces freely admit the great part played in the victory by Imperial tanks operating under the commander of the Canadian forces. The tanks are an Imperial force, exactly as is the Royal Flying Corps, and in both are many Canadian enlisted men. In this battle the tanks went ahead of our infantry, clearing the war, beating out roads through entanglements, overwhelming the enemy trench system, breaking up machine gun nests, and even coming to grips with concealed enemy batteries. The tanks are commanded by Imperial officers. Each ran his own show, and a gallant and resourceful lot they are. Many of them fought with us at Vimy, and they are our tried comrades. We will go anywhere with Canadians. Such a show as you put on has never been seen in this war, said one of them.

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES

British Lines Have Been Pushed Forward at Several Points on the French Front.

HEAVY FIGHTING

Canadian Press:

LONDON, Aug. 17.—(Official.)— In Picardy the British troops have made additional progress. The British lines have been pushed eastward north of the Amiens-Roye road, and north of the Ancre.

The text of the statement reads:

The pressure of troops north of the Roye road and north of the Ancre continued, and progress has been made by us in both sectors. In the neighbourhood of Vieux Berquin, our patrols had sharp fighting yesterday, and further encounters took place during last night. Our troops made progress in this sector and in the neighbourhood of Merris and have taken prisoners. The hostile artillery has shown considerable activity about Mount Ruge and Scherpenberg, and in the vicinity of Zillebeke Lake.

FRENCH OFFICIAL.

Canadian Press:

PARIS, Aug. 17.—(Official.)—In the region south of Roye, French troops have made further progress in Loges Wood and have reached the outskirts of the Wood east. There was heavy artillery fighting west of Roye during the night. North-west of Ribecourt and other points the French have repulsed two strong German attacks.

THE STATEMENT READS:

In the region west of Roye there was heavy artillery activity during the night. South of Avre French troops continued to make progress in Bois Des Loges and reached the eastern outskirts of the Wood. Between Matz and the Oise we repulsed two heavy enemy attacks against Monolithe and Carnoy Farms, and maintained our positions. Northwest of Rheims, an enemy raid near La Nouvillette was without results.

The Germans Made Some Important Concessions at the Recent Conference

Matter of Sending Troops to the Western Front Was One of the Points Discussed.

OTHER MATTERS

(Canadian Press.)

London, August 17.—Germany has made concessions to Austria on the Polish question, in consequence of the strong stand taken by Emperor Charles and the Austro-Hungarian government, according to information received by the correspondent of the Daily Mail at the Hague, to which the Mail gives much prominence.

It is possible there will be no union of the Crowns of Poland and Austria, but the King of Poland is certain to be an Austrian Archduke, says the correspondent, who adds that the discussion at the German main headquarters had the following bases:

The Germans demanded that Austria send to the western front from 10 to 15 divisions of picked troops. Emperor Charles and his advisers made a counter demand that Germany make further declarations regarding Belgium, guaranteeing evacuation, restoration, and an indemnity, and made a powerful movement in the direction of peace; and that the Polish question be solved in a manner favorable to Austrian wishes. Advisers of the Austrian emperor, it is declared, emphasized that the opposition of Austrian military and public opinion to transfer troops to the western front was universal. This opposition could only be quieted if the government was assured of Polish support, which could be obtained by securing from Germany concessions on account of Poland, and if the public could be shown that the German government had been influenced in the direction of another strong effort to obtain peace. Short of this Austria would not send troops to the western front.

PETERBORO CAUGHT THE SPIRIT OF THE CHAUTAUQUA YESTERDAY

Welsh Quartette Made a Hit—The Junior Chautauqua Attracted a Large Crowd.

Peterborough caught the Chautauqua spirit well yesterday, and by the evening session there were few seats available.

In the morning the Junior Chautauqua attracted a large number of young and old who came to see just what a supervised playground could be, and the parents and children alike were delighted by Miss Johnston's splendid management of the kiddies. Miss Margaret MacDonald, of the Conservatory staff, very generously supplied the music, and her time and technique were appreciated by both the management and children.

In the evening the Welsh quartette of singers kept the audience in roars of laughter by their humorous songs. "They Go Wild Over Me" especially took the fancy of the public. Rev. Dr. Davidson's originally intended address on the "Camouflage of Kaiserism" was changed to an interesting talk on Ireland, illustrated by a series of beautiful slides of the prominent men in church and politics, and of the beauties of the country.

Coroner's Jury Found That George Morrison's Death Was Result of an Accident—He Was Struck at G.T.R. Crossing on August 9th.

WALKED ROUND THE GATE

That George Morrison died from the effects of a shock caused by his injuries when he was struck by a G.T.R. train at the King Street crossing on Friday, August 9th, and that the circumstances were wholly accidental, was the verdict presented by the coroner's jury last night.

Mr. A. S. Ross testified that the late Mr. Morrison had passed the gates before they went down.

Mr. Seth Adlam, a shipper at the Peterborough Lock Co., stated emphatically that the gates were down before Morrison came to them, and that he (Morrison) walked around the end of the gate.

The gateman, John A. Horner, said that the train was a block away when he put the gates down. He also saw Morrison come around the end of the gate, but as many pedestrians do this and wait until the train goes by, he did not take any more notice of him. Morrison was right on the track when Horner noticed him next. He was using crutches at the time.

Mr. George Jobbitt, a G.T.R. conductor, did not see the accident, but said that he prevented Morrison from being run down about ten days before.

By-law Against Whistling.

William Dolby, the engineer, said that there is a by-law against blowing the whistle on the train, but that the bell must be rung. It had been ringing for two miles down the track, and was ringing when the accident occurred.

Frank Raines, who was with Mr. Adlam at the time, corroborated the latter's evidence.

Dr. J. Malcolm McCulloch, who attended Morrison, found him on the enclosed space just south of the station. He was suffering a great deal, and was taken to the hospital. Dr. McCulloch stitched his wounds, but the case was hopeless. He died about three o'clock the same day. He had a lacerated wound over the right eyebrow, some injuries on his arm, one of the ribs on his right side was fractured, and another bone was crushed.

The jury returned their verdict at 10 p.m.

Are Pushing Enemy Back

Only Matter of Time Before Germans Will Have to Evacuate Lassigny.

(United Press Service.)

(By Webb Miller.)

PARIS, Aug. 7.— Almost yard by yard the French and British are prying their way between five villa points in the Germans' Picardy line, rendering the enemies' hold on certain places more and more precarious.

At the extreme southern corner of the battle front the French already have shoved Gen. Von Boehm over the edge of the important Lassigny heights, dominating the country for miles around. They are now pushing slowly over the difficult country south-west of Lassigny, which is cut up into little hills and valleys that are ideal for machine gun nests.

Tightening the Line.

Carefully and methodically, Marshal Foch is tightening the crescent shaped line around both Lassigny and Roye, exerting pressure on the corns of the crescent between Chaulnes and Roye, between Roye and Lassigny, and in the centre of both crescents. Meanwhile, he is aiming a thrust directly between Lassigny and Noyon. Further north the crescent is less pronounced. From their new positions the French hold under their guns Butte De Plemont, Bois De Reserve and Mont Reinaux. They also cover Noyon, from the westward and southwestward, wherefor it seems but a matter of time before the Germans will be forced to evacuate Lassigny, the second of the bulwarks of the present line to go.

PETERBORO MUSIC DEALERS MOTORED TO SOUTH BEACH

On Thursday afternoon the six music dealers in Peterborough — the J. M. Greene Music Co., the Heintzman Co., F. Whitehouse, J. W. Stewart, the Peterborough Music Co., and J. M. Fife—joined forces and entertained their employees, numbering thirty, to a delightful trip to the lakes. The party motored to South Beach, where a sumptuous dinner was served at the hotel, after which the dealers and representatives from the employees delivered eloquent speeches. After dinner some sports, such as pillow fights, baseball and racing, were indulged in, then to vary up the programme, the yacht "Alberta" took the party around the lakes. Returning, a splendid musical programme was given, contributed to by Mr. Asa Huycke and Miss Great Lebar, who sang, and some choruses by the guests. A charming little dance was given.

Returning home by motor, the picnickers declared they had never spent a happier day, and the employees expressed their hearty appreciation of so generous an entertainment. The officers who were responsible for the trip were J. M. Greene, president; J. Fife, secretary; F. Whitehouse and H. Britton, the committee.

SEPTEMBER IN ALGONQUIN PARK.

September in Algonquin Park, Ontario, is one of the most delightful months of the year. A beneficial holiday can be enjoyed with all the comforts of home at "The Highland Inn," situated in the midst of a charming wilderness on Cache Lake. It is also a good month for the camper and canoeist. Splendid fishing is found in the innumerable lakes (over 1500) that nestle in the forests of pine and balsam. Don't leave it until the last minute to make your reservation at the Inn, and write to Miss Jean Lindsay, Manager, Algonquin Park Station, Ontario, for rates, etc., or to any Grand Trunk Railway agent, or C. E. Horning, D.P.A., Toronto, for handsome illustrated booklet, telling you all about the district.

SAILORS' RELIEF WEEK.

The announcement that the week of September 1st to the 7th has been chosen for the Sailors' Relief Fund finds our people animated by the deepest gratitude inspired by the enemy's reverse on the Marne. The German salient thrust at Paris has been sent back and straightened out along the Vesle river, after an alarming advance had been turned into a rout.

The armies of the Allies struck the blow, but the dim, grim power of the British navy was behind them. The timely assistance of the American soldiers was effected by their safe transport, a shipping feat that has been astonishing in its magnitude and celerity. If some of us are unable to appreciate the service of the fleet in maintaining our supremacy of the seas, we must all realize its share in this latest triumph. Our sighs of relief therefore, if sincere and heartfelt, should be coined during the first week in September for the aid and comfort of the wives and soldiers of the sailors whose sacrifice paid for our restored sense of security.

TEARS OF FERDINAND.

What tender heart will not be moved, what lachrymal ducts will refuse to work overtime, at the beautiful sentimental legend sent out of Germany that Ferdinand of Bulgaria—poor soul!—is so broken down that he weeps involuntarily and bountifully, early and often, and that the sympathetic Kaiser has sent an expert in neurology or crocodilology to "observe" his dear friend and brother. This accomplished artist in political corruption, this cynic who as Prince was morally responsible for one famous assassination and as King said, with prophetic insight, "I intend to be on the side with the "assassins," this inheritor of the high moral principles of the Coburgs and the Bourbons must be laughing at the English and American credulities on which he has long tried to play. What in the world could he find to weep about unless it be that, as he recalls his so humane treatment of the Serbians, on all that concatenation of robbery and massacre, a pious tear may fall from his eyes as he thinks of that fine old, early Bulgarian hero and philanthropist, Krum, who used to drink his wine out of the skull of the Emperor Nicephorus. Ferdinand is no sentimental burglar. He leaves that sort of thing to the Kaiser and Karl Rosner.—New York Times.

MAY CURTAIL COAL SUPPLY.

Is there a danger of diminished coal supplies for Peterborough next winter as a result of the Fuel Controller fixing the gross margin for this city? The gross margin, he explained in his notification, means the difference in the coast of the coal f.o.b. Peterborough and the retailer's selling price in lots of one ton or thereabouts.

Coal dealers augment the supplies they receive from the mines with which they have established a connection by purchasing in the open market from what the trade calls independent companies. Large shipments of this independent coal saved Peterborough last winter from a shortage that would have caused widespread suffering. But this coal costs the dealer considerably more than that which he receives from the companies for whom he is virtually a local distributor. Hence if he continues to buy from these two sources, it follows that he will have two different cost prices.

Since the gross margin is fixed, he must quote two selling prices, and two selling prices of coal of equal quality promises no end of trouble for him. For example, to-day the dealer receives a carload from his regular company and sells it at $11 a ton. To-morrow a shipment arrives from an independent company to whom he had to pay $1.50 a ton more than the other coal. It is manifest that he must quote this coal at $12.50 to maintain his profits. The result would be one group of customers paying $11 a ton and another group paying $12.50. Such a discrepancy would lead to loud complaints, and the dealer may be tempted to depend upon his "line" company for whatever quantity they can supply him.

The coal dealer has had more than his share of worries during the past two years, and it would be natural to expect that he would avoid the difficulties that loom behind purchases of independent coal under the new regulation. As a direct result, the city would be deprived of the emergency supplies bought from the independents, and the apparent shortage would become more threatening. It seems to be a matter the Council's Fuel Committee might investigate for the purpose of assuring the people that the dealers will not relax their efforts to obtain all the coal possible for next winter. Should their intentions be as feared, then the Council faces the duty of increasing the reserve it is gathering for the citizens in order that there may be no deficiency from any curtailment in the retailers purchases.

TWO WAR-TIME ELECTIONS.

In a few months a new House of Representatives will be elected in the United States, and in all probability there will be a general election in the United Kingdom. Votes representing about 150,000,000 English-speaking people will be cast. It will be impossible to keep party politics out of these contests. The old alignment of partyism, it is true, may not be preserved, but there will be a government seeking vindication and support, and a party or a group of parties opposed to the government. There will be charges and counter-charges, and it will be difficult for the antagonists to keep their heads and to be fair.

In the United States, although the maintenance of President Wilson in office does not depend on the party complexion of the House, he is, to quote the Washington correspondent of the New York Post, "strongly suspected of wanting a Democratic Congress elected next fall," and such suspicion is "well founded." The correspondent, Mr. Lawrence, adds:

"The President doesn't see why Chairman Hays, of the Republican National Committee, and Col. Roosevelt and former President Taft should be pointing out that the country can be kept out of ruin and disaster only by electing a Republican Congress, while he as the leader of the Democratic party, which they hope to oust, should have to remain absolutely silent and without means of defence. Certainly Mr. Wilson will want a Democratic Congress elected, and when the opportune time comes in the autumn, no doubt he will say so in his own way, and give reasons."

There will probably, however, be nothing out of which the friends of the Kaiser can take comfort. The Republican party is as strong for the allies as the Democratic party; and if there are pro-Germans, they are probably in both parties, and have little hope of any result that will please them.

In Great Britain the situation will be much more complicated. The Government is composed of Liberals and Conservatives. The opposing elements are even more varied. There will be Irish Home Rulers, followers of Mr. Asquith, and followers of Mr. Henderson, the Labour leader. As to the war, Mr. Sydney Webb, in an article in the New Republic says: "Substantially, the official programmes of all three parties (Government, Asquith and Henderson) will be identical. Mr. Lloyd George, Mr. Asquith, and Mr. Henderson—differing mainly in phraseology and in the proportion allowed to particular details — will alike declare that we must fight for the aims laid down by President Wilson; and nevertheless neglect no honest overtures of peace from the enemy." This, however, is a declaration made in a period of comparative calm and may be shaken to pieces by the shock of a fiercely-fought election. We can hardly expect the Government to take any other position than that its return to power is essential to the allied cause. Fair and unfair arguments will be used. Lloyd George has made enemies as well as friends, and around his personality the battle will rage furiously. There is a pacifist element in the Labour Party, and it will be exceedingly difficult to maintain unity in its ranks. The Labour party has a comprehensive and intelligent scheme for social reconstruction after the war. It is unfortunate that this cannot be considered on its merits, and this can hardly be done in a war-time election.—Toronto Star.

WHAT OTHER EDITORS SAY

Unanimous.

"The worst days of the war are still in store for Germany," the Kaiser is quoted in a German newspaper. Wherein, for the first time in four years, the Kaiser and the rest of the world seem to be in full accord.—Detroit News.

Co Out to Meet It.

Should a future coal shortage be judged inevitable, the public would welcome now emergency measures of whatever nature to relieve the situation after the snow flies. Efforts of a "heatless day" character, adopted in time, might save considerable hardship later on. After the warning of last winter's abnormal conditions, there will be little excuse for anyone in a responsible place who is caught napping this winter.—Montreal Star.

All In a Day's Work.

With one or two halts for petrol two British army aviators have just completed a flight from England to Egypt, a distance of two thousand miles. The story is told in a ten-line cabled despatch. Were not things of greater interest happening every day those aviators would find themselves and their feat the centre around which news stories consuming pages would be written. As it is the official report dismisses the feat as "merely a bit of routine work." Some day that will be said of a flight across the Atlantic.—New York Herald.

"No Nearer Solution."

"It was to have been taken for granted that the United States and Japan would reach an agreement with the Entente Powers in regard to joint action in Siberia. But whatever is done in Siberia, the Russian problem is little, if any, nearer solution than it was before. Any policy that is adopted must necessarily be a matter of guesswork. The opportunities to go wrong are almost infinite and the chances of going right are few and doubtful."—New York World.

What Prussia Has Done.

Germany has lost in potential lives the equivalent of 4.5 per cent. of its total pre-war population, Austria 5 per cent., and Hungary 7 per cent. The present war, by the fall of births it has occasioned, will cost belligerent countries of Europe not less than 12½ millions of potential lives. While the war has filled the graves it has emptied the cradles. At the present time every day that the war continues means the loss of 7,000 potential lives to the United Kingdom, France, Italy, and the Central Empires. Race suicide among European people on the most colossal scale has been the outstanding result of German militarism.

SMALL STORES need advertising as well as large ones. If the small dealer fears that his little ad. will be lost in a newspaper carrying large ads., he should be reminded if this were true, it would follow that his little store located in a city with large stores, would also be lost.

THE HOME CIRCLE COLUMN

Pleasant Evening Reveries—A Column Dedicated to Tired Mothers as They Join the Home Circle at Evening Tide

CRUDE THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITORIAL PEN

Every child has a right to such an education as will qualify for life's duties. This is recognized as a patriotic duty by the state. The permanence of our political institutions depends on the intelligence of our citizenship. "The bayonets of foreign soldiers are less to be feared than are the ballots of ignorant voters." The welfare of the state depends more on the moral and religious training of her citizens than on their intellectual training, yet the state makes no provision for this moral discipline. In some cases it makes it difficult or even impossible to secure such training. The training of the mind is not all. There must be a training of the moral sensibilities, particularly the will. Not all this is the duty of the public school; part is the duty of the church, but the largest part is the function of home. Every child deprived, by what ever means, of the education and training is defrauded out an inalienable right, and when he comes into the inheritance of citizenship, may be depended upon to avenge himself on the society that perpetrated the fraud upon him.

MOTHERS VACATION.

One of our exchanges says that we hate to admit it—we men folks—but mother is about the only person around the house who never gets a real vacation.

Mothers are peculiar, from the standpoint of husbands and sons and daughters. A husband will go on a vacation just as sure as the season for vacation comes, and no matter whether business is flourishing or not. Perhaps the fish are not actually calling him—but he thinks they are. Daughter, too, packs her travelling bag when she wants to and starts off for some college mate's home for a few days or weeks. Brother starts off on an automobile tour or goes to some river resort for a week or so.

But mother too often stays at home and makes things comfortable and happy for the members of the family who happen to be there.

Does mother ask for a vacation? Of course not! Mother doesn't have time to ask for one. She works from sun to sun and longer. She sews for daughter, mends for son, fixes up the last summer's Palm Beach for father. She gets daughter's vacation clothes ready. She sends her boy away on an excursion. She sees that dad's apparel is fixed up all right before he leaves for the fishing waters—but she stays at home.

All of which shows that there is something vitally wrong with the make-up of ordinary folk in these days. If we had the proper respect for mother we would compel her to take her vacation—and then we would take ours, if conditions are right.

So why not change things a mite this summer.

Why not go to mother and insist that she go away for a couple of weeks or months to visit back home or to get a change of living at a little summer resort?

There are many so-called homes that do not deserve the name at all. Home means comfort, but when we have it fixed up so elaborately that we must sit in the garret or the back within, does a good work for civilization.

If you ask a child where home is he would say where mother is. Home of our childhood, where mother reigns queen, soothes our heartaches, ministers to our needs, protects us from the blasts of life. This is home on earth. But we must strive to secure the home yard to genuinely enjoy ourselves, then it is the time we made a change and turned out the too-good-to-use articles and substitute for them real homely things that we could enjoy every day of the year and every moment of the day.

The housewife, who at night raises the shades of her prettily furnished parlour, that the world in passing may catch a glimpse of the happy picture "where they know not the sorrow of time." Home beyond the dark river of death, where no sweet ties are severed, with God the Father, God of Son, our Saviour, our mother and father, brothers and sisters, all there in that beautiful "home of the soul."

Is not the happiest man or woman the most successful in the highest sense of the word? Given the comforts of life, is a thing more desirable than the sunshine of a happy home, where a loving wife, and merry, happy children abide, and where friends congregate for cheerful, inspiring association? Industry and temperance and courage will bring to any man the comforts of life. Add to this a kind heart and a generous, tactful consideration toward all men and life is complete.

Some men say they are perfectly willing to spend their whole lives in making their wives happy, but they don't spend any money for the same purpose.

The roots of nine-tenths of the failures in integrity, the departures from honesty, the deceits, the trickery, lies in the false standards of the home.

Marriage seems never so much a failure to a man as when something goes wrong at home that he can't possibly blame his wife for.

When a man has no mind of his own he can easily find a woman who will give him a piece of hers.

The world would be much better than it is if people would live up to their obituary notices.

The way never to have cloudy weather is to have the sun inside of you.

Count no expense loss that makes the home more delightful.

We are happy in this world just in proportion as we make others happy.

LEMON JUICE TAKES OFF TAN

Girls! Make bleaching lotion if skin is sunburned, tanned or freckled

Squeeze the juice of two lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of Orchard White, shake well, and you have a quarter pint of the best freckle, sunburn and tan lotion, and complexion beautifier, at very, very, small cost.

Your grocer has the lemons, and any drug store or toilet counter will supply three ounces of Orchard White for a few cents. Massage this sweetly fragrant lotion into the face, neck, arms and hands each day and see how freckles, sunburn, windburn and tan disappear, and how clear, soft and white the skin becomes. Yes! It is harmless.

FILM INSTRUCTS AVIATORS.

Various Problems in Machine Gunnery Taught by Motion Pictures.

AN AMERICAN AVIATION TRAINING CAMP IN ENGLAND.—The moving picture is being widely used in training of American pilots in this country. The young flying officers who are sent to the Armament School here to acquaint themselves with the use of airplane guns and gun gears find their three weeks' course a most interesting one, owing partly to the large share which the moving-picture machine plays in the instruction.

The pupil is not required to sit out a lengthy lecture read aloud from the notes of an instructor. Instead, the various branches, of gunnery training, such as the stripping and assembling of guns and the various points to be observed before, during, and after flight, are demonstrated by films, accompanied by concise explanations by competent officers.

Frequently a film is run over the screen several times at different speeds, so that the pupil gets a very intimate idea of the process being illustrated. Monotony and complexity find no place in this method of training.

The films standardize the correct methods, and their instructional value is far reaching. The film work is not confined to gunnery alone, but is continued in the other technical courses, such as aerial tactics and bomb dropping. According to British instructors, the use of the film has shortened and improved the course of training in these departments very materially.

In Old Age

Health and comfort in old age depends largely on keeping the liver and kidneys in healthful action.

Pains and aches, stiffness of the joints, lumbago and rheumatism tell of poisons left in the blood by sluggishness of the liver and kidneys.

People in advanced years hold Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills in high esteem because of the promptness and certainty with which they awaken the action of kidneys, liver and bowels.

ROMANCE OF WAR BY CRIPPLE WHO "FAKED"

Rene Betrand Was a Great Hero Till the Police Got Him.

HAD MANY MEDALS

PARIS, Aug. 17. — The heroic exploits and hair-breath escapes of D'Artagnan, as narrated by Dumas in "The Three Musketeers," fade into comparative insignificance when compared with the achievements of Rene Bertrand, as told by himself. Minus an arm and a leg, with nine medals glittering on his breast, and asserting that his body more than 30 bullet bullet and bayonet wounds, "Pte. Rene Betrand of the French colonel infantry" posed in Paris as the greatest hero of the war.

Now he has been arrested as perhaps one of the war's greatest fakirs and the police authorities declare that he lost his leg and arm in a railway accident and that imprisonments instead of five citations compose his record. It was the publication of Betrand's photograph in a French newspaper that led to his undoing.

Meantime, while reveling in the fruits of his own romance Betrand enjoyed the confidence of army officers and the credit of the leading Paris cafes. One famous and fearless aviator made Pte. Betrand his godson and "adopted him for the balance of the war."

The medals he wore included the Cross of the Legion of Honour, the Military Medal, the War Cross with seven palms and five stars, the British Military Cross, the Belgian War Cross, the Colonial Medal, Medal of Morocco, and the medal for saving life, and the medal for wounds. In addition he wore the "fouragere" of the legion of honour.

Where he got them has not been disclosed, but to account for them Betrand constructed a story of wonderful incidents. According to his tale he won the military medal by saving the lives of two officers and was himself wounded in the thigh when surrounded by natives while fighting with the French Territorial Forces in Morocco, in 1913.

Then according to his own story, Betrand won the war cross in a patrol exploit in the present war, when, after his companions were killed, he captured a whole German cooking outfit at Laon, having killed most of the cooks. Next, fighting with the British on the Somme he won the military cross by capturing 12 Germans single-handed. Meantime he had been captured five times by the Germans but always managed to escape.

In the next chapter of his biography Betrand appears in the fight around Monastir on the Macedonian front where he simultaneously operated four machine guns and wrecked such an awful havoc with the enemy that their attack was beaten off. At the battle of Monastir he essayed to rescue an officer who lay wounded in No Man's Land and was himself wounded in the abdomen. Despite his pain he dragged the officer back to safety and went out again to rescue a wounded nurse. In the last trip his arm was shattered by a bullet and later was amputated.

Next we find Betrand a passenger on board a ship bound for France. The torpedo which hit the vessel shattered one of Betrand's legs. Calmly amputating it with his knife Betrand bound up the stump, dragged himself to the rail, threw himself overboard, paused long enough to rescue the captain and swam to a piece of drift wood where he lived for three days and three nights before being rescued by a Spanish vessel. For this Betrand said he received the medal of the legion of honour.

Numerous stars and leaves of palms that Betrand wore upon his war cross had been acquired, according to his tale, by 12 distinct acts of heroism worthy of the coveted cross, but the details of these incidents have not yet been given to

NO ANTHRACITE COAL FOR RAILWAYS THIS WINTER

MONTREAL, Aug. 15.—The supply of anthracite coal for Canadian householders next winter will be helped out by an order of the Canadian Railway Board, directing the railways to use no anthracite in stations or elsewhere except in the Baker heaters used in passenger cars when heat from the engine is unavailable. These require anthracite. In addition to the annual ten million tons of bituminous coal required for locomotives and in railway shops, the roads had estimated their requirements of anthracite this year at 96,000 tons. Of this amount the new orders of the Canadian Railway War Board will save over 60 per cent.

Would Beat Charlie Chaplin.

An irascible and not very judicial person had been listening to a lengthy argument on whether Ireland should or should not have Home Rule. Finally he could contain himself no longer and burst out: "I wish they'd give 'em Home Rule and then give me the motion picture rights."

Chautauqua Music

The Artists Use a Williams' New Scale Piano.

An interesting feature of the musical part of the Chautauqua course of entertainments now going on is that the piano used is a WILLIAMS NEW SCALE, supplied direct from the factory. It is an extremely rich-toned instrument and the attention of those who attend is directed to it.

The Williams New Scale Piano, has been the favorite instrument of so many of the great artists who have visited Canada that its purity of tone is becoming more and more known throughout the world wherever these talented people travel. Peterborough people can hear it any time at the Green Music Store.

Canadians a Band of Brothers Show Same Old Dash and Bravery

No Jealousy Between the Divisions and Battalions, Esprit de Corps is Splendid—Took Gallant Part in Recent Battle.

A WELL ORGANIZED "SHOW"

WITH THE CANADIAN FORCES IN FRANCE, Aug. 16 (by J. F. B. Livesay, Canadian Press Correspondent).—The better one comes to know the Canadians the more one realizes the band of brothers they are. There is no jealousy between divisions and divisions, brigade and brigade, or battalion and battalion. All have the highest admiration for the other fellow, and most modest conception of the value of their own particular job. There is a total absence of "swank." They have pride in their force and in the intense satisfaction that they are Canadians, but there is nothing personal about it. They are part and parcel of a wonderfully efficient machine, each carrying on his allotted job in humbleness of spirit.

TYPICAL OF FORCE.

The anecdotes of battle that follow are garnered in a visit to a couple of units and are therefore typical of the entire force. The diaries of battalion commanders must teem with them, and in time these will be available to the Canadian people as a priceless record of a great feat of arms. In the meantime, such as these may serve. All day Thursday, when the battle opened, great difficulty was met in advancing on our extreme left. The nature of the ground and strength and depth of the enemy defence made of this a much harder nut to crack than the comparatively free going over the prairie to the north. Finally it was decided that the only way to advance was to turn the left flank. A famous Quebec battalion was entrusted with the task. They had to take up their position in the dark by the aid only of the stars, maps and compasses. Only military men can comprehend the difficulty of the undertaking. At the appointed hour—half-past four in the morning—they were on their ground, whence they advanced and took the position, forcing the entire enemy line in this sector to fall back, with trifling loss to us.

WON THE BET.

One officer had a bet with another that he would be in the Boche divisional headquarters at Quesnel first on Thursday night. It was a wild race, and was not settled until Friday morning, when the winner actually took possession of the quarters while his troops were still fighting at the far end of the town. He captured the entire enemy divisional plant. Shorly after the loser came along and had to content himself wih humbler billets. This was nine miles from the starting point of Thursday morning.

The advance of a Manitoba battalion was the record of the battle, being over twenty thousand yards from our front line. One officer fell while leading on his men against a machine gun nest that was enfilading the line. "Come on, boys," he cried, "we don't care for machine guns."

FIVE WOUND STRIPES.

He bore five wound stripes. Another battalion was directed to take a wood. The colonel found it alive with Boches, making it impossible to pass without being mowed down by machine guns. The first three companies were hotly engaged, and could not be broken off. The colonel got hold of the fourth company and personally organized an attack on a corner of the wood in face of heavy machine-gun fire. That portion of the wood was cleared, making it possible for other companies to proceed towards their objective and outflank the entire position, compelling its garrison to surrender. While marching down a road this battalion was attacked by eighteen German aeroplanes flying low and sweeping the road with machine-gun fire. The order was given for the men to scatter, and not one was hit. A cavalry squadron galloping down the same road also escaped without a casualty.

BEST ORGANIZED SHOW.

One officer, summing up the battle, said it was the best organized show he had ever seen. The arrangements were perfect and worked without a hitch. Within twenty-four hours of the casualties the men reported to replace them and the supplies came through as regularly as in the camp.

THE FIRST LINE OF DEFENCE

Pure blood is the body's first line of defense against disease. Strong, healthy blood neutralizes the poisons of invading germs, or destroy the germs themselves. That is why many people exposed to disease do not contract it. Those whose blood is weak and watery and therefore lacking in defensive powers are most liable to infection. Everybody may observe that healthy, red blooded people are less liable to colds and the grippe than pale, bloodless people. It is the bloodless people who tire easily, who are short of breath at slight exertion, who have poor appetites, and who wake up in the mornings as tired as when they went to bed. While women and girls chiefly suffer from bloodlessness the trouble also affects both boys and men. It simply affects girls and women to a greater extent because there is a greater demand upon their blood supply.

To renew and build up the blood, there is no remedy can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They tone up the entire system, make the blood rich and red, feed and strengthen starving nerves, increase the appetite, put colour in the cheeks, give refreshing sleep and drive away that unnatural tired feeling. Plenty of sunlight and wholesome food will do the rest.

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Voice of The People

Peterborough, Aug. 16th, 1918.

Edtior of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—In the Examiner of August 15th, I have seen that Mlle. Therese Clemenceau, daughter of the French Premier, the "Tiger of France," is to marry Sergt. J. Jung, of the French army. This is very welcome news to me, as Jules Jung is an old chum of mine. We were brought up together and spent our carefree boyhood days together in their manor, "Petitville," at Bischwiller, in Alsace, where my father was the manager of their estate, and where his parents came from Besaucon (France) to spend the most part of the year.

When the French frontier was closed in 1887 by severe passport regulations, their visits became seldom. He afterwards took up the career as lawyer at the court of Paris. Both his parents are Alsatians. His father died on May 24th, 1894. He was supreme judge of the court of appeal at Besaucon. He had a state funeral and his body was brought over the frontier for burial in the family vault at Bischwiller. Only last week I received a letter from his mother, wherein she tells me that her son Jules went through the battles of the Marne, Amiens, the Champagne, and is now at the Somme, near the British troops, where he is sergeant-artificier in an artillery unit, sending over greetings to the Boche lines in form of shrapnels. About a year ago the German government sequestered their manor at Bischwille, and where there used to be a merry gathering of high French nobility, cultivating French art, music, literature and sport. A Prussian looting junker holds his diabolical sway, and makes good use of all the stock in stable, barn and cellar. But he will not enjoy it for long. The French Poilus mean it, when they say, "On les aura," and they will get them.

Thanking you, Mr. Edit r, for the kindness in giving me a space in your valuable paper, I remain,

Yours truly,
EMILE BAUMER.

On Wednesday, Aug. 14th, Master Donald Richardson, of Viamede, celebrated his birthday. A large cake was sent to him by a Peterborough friend, and the little fellow took the greatest delight in passing plates of his cake so that everyone in the dining room would have a piece. As he is a great favourite in the house, he received several other gifts. In the evening the guests at Viamede were taken out for a launch ride by Mrs. Richardson. The launch was full and a number of boats were towed. The weather man was kind and the day was a great success.

Wednesday was also the birthday of Flight Lieut. Goubjila, and it was suitably celebrated by the many friends the young man has made since he came to Viamede. He also reecived gifts and congratulations.

WHAT SIMCOE THINKS OF THE CHAUTAUQUA

An Unqualified Success—Arrangements Made for Next Season.

The following letter has been received by Mr. C. E. Smith from Mr. H. S. Macpherson, Principal of the Public School in Simcoe, who was chairman of the Chautauqua Committee in that town. It speaks for itself.

Dear Mr. Smith,—The Canadian Chautauqua series just concluded in Simcoe was an unqualified success We entered into the contract with some little trepidation as it was a new undertaking for us, but soon found we had no grounds for fear of success. The programme was of a very high order and so varied as to meet the tastes of everybody. It was interesting, educative and inspirational to children and adults alike. Those who attended one session rarely missed the remainder of them.

The superintendent in charge was very gentlemanly in his business relations and exceedingly thoughtful of the enjoyment and comfort of the audiences.

So well pleased were we that the committee immediately signed the contract for a Chautauqua next year.

Secretary of Committee

Baby's Great Danger During Hot Weather

More little ones die during the hot weather than at any other time of the year. Diarrhoea, dysentery, cholera infantum and stomach troubles come without warning and when a medicine is not at hand to give promptly, the short delay too frequently means that the child has passed beyond aid. Baby's Own Tablets should always be kept in homes where there are young children. An occasional dose of the Tablets will prevent stomach and bowel troubles, or if these troubles come suddenly the prompt use of the Tablets will cure the baby. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Harden in Big Protest Against Prussian Policy

Says Frankly British and Americans Are Fighting and Dying Simply for Their Ideals.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17.—Another violent attack on Prussian policy, with a warning of the storm brewing in Russia, and a frank tribute to British and American soldiers fighting for their ideals, has just been published in the Zukunft by Maximilian Harden, the free-spoken German editor. An official despatch from France quotes extracts from the article, commenting particularly upon the action of the German censors in permitting it to appear.

"At the moment when the fire of Slavic hatred coming from the four corners of Russia is developing into one single immense flame," Harden asked, "how can our rulers think of finding supporters for throne and supplying candidates for them? Are our rulers desirous of supporting the plans of the adversary and uniting in one single fire all the sparkling flames which are burning or smouldering between Vladivostok and Sebastopol, between Murmansk and Flume?"

Harden declared the soul of modern Germany is dominated by the idea of bondage; is summed up in "down on your knees." He attacked the Prussian House of Lords, and especially Prince Salm-Horstmar, who said, like his Emperor, that the present war was nothing but the conflict between the American conception of the world and the Germanic one.

"You think that the British and Americans are such as the conservative papers represent them," he wrote. "They have proved themselves to be very different on the Yser, at Arras, and at Dormans. They have shed the best of their blood, spent hundreds of thousands without dreams of conquest, simply for their ideals. Does this in any way correspond to the picture that you have drawn of them?"

WERE BRIDE AND GROOM IN NEWARK SIXTY YEARS AGO

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hamilton Celebrate Their Diamond Wedding Yesterday.

Sixty years ago in the parsonage of a little Methodist church in Newark, N.J., the wedding was solemnized of Jane Wilson and Francis Hamilton, yesterday surrounded by their children and friends, the bride and groom of 1858 celebrated their diamond wedding at their home since 1866, 173 Hunter street east.

The bride and groom, who are in perfect health after a long and happy married life, look forward with their children to many more such years. Six children, sixteen grandchildren, and six great grandchildren are living, and of these, six grandsons have served for their King. Lieut. W. Hamilton, at present recruiting in Chicago, won his Military Cross and was wounded twice while serving with the Canadians; Sapper Edward Carl Russel, Winnipeg, returned shell-shocked; Gunner W. Patterson has been gassed twice; Sergt. Edwin B. Patterson has been at the front since the first; Gunner Walter Patterson is in training at Petawawa, and Driver Albert Huffman is in England in hospital after along period at the front.

Interesting Memories.

Mr. Hamilton, to-day as hale and hearty as many a man of 60, although he is 86 years of age, has many interesting memories. Born in Ireland, he crossed the sea in a sailing ship in four weeks when a mere boy. He lived from '56 to '62 in Connecticut, when he came to Canada to reside for four years in Manvers, and reached Peterborough in '66. Naturally most of his early friends have gone, but that he and Mrs. Hamilton are still well beloved, is testified by the showers of bouquets received on their anniversary yesterday. Ten years ago they celebrated their golden wedding.

MR. ED. ELLIOTT ISSUES WARNING TO PETERBORO COUNTY FARMERS

Condemns Scheme to Shoulder Farmers With the Burden of Increased Expenditures for Roads.

AUTOMOBILE OWNERS

Mr. Editor,

Dear Sir,—Having been a close observer of municipal expenditure for 25 years, I have honestly opposed the adoption of the county road system by the County Council. Some 20 years ago, when the Reform Government of Ontario set aside the million dollar grant for such purpose, and on a similar basis as to expenditure, after careful consideration, I, publicly and in ordinary conservation with any fellow-farmers, opposed it. I pointed out the facts as I saw them and see them to-day, namely, that 100 per cent. of the farmers contributed heavily to an expenditure when only 20 per cent. of them benefited directly.

The present Government has added and in many ways established an improved system, such as suburban roads, that would receive assistance from the cities and towns where there is a certain population, yet it is so provided that not more than ½ mill on the dollar can be spent by the cities or towns in any year for that purpose. Farmers may be taxed any rate that such road building or maintenance demands. Where does the traffic come from that destroys the roads to-day? Any ordinary gravel road such as we had on the main roads of this county five years ago would carry the lighter cars that are used by the farmers, or in fact carry the 1-ton cars used by many of the citizens of the cities 15 miles an hour without being more than ordinarily deteriorated, but nothing short of a paved road will stand a heavy car driven at from 30 to 40 miles per hour. What roads do the city and town people use in the country? Why practically none but the main roads, therefore the condition of the main roads to-day, where rough and being fired into the ditch is due to traffic such as referred to. Yet ½ mill is all that can be raised by the city and town, and the distance is limited. According to population, from 4 to 6 or 8 miles from the city is town. On the side roads and concessions throughout the county are they not in as good condition to-day, or are they not better, than they were ten years ago? You will all agree that they are. Then the trouble crops up on the main roads, and that trouble is due to autos and largely, if not altogether, to the excessive speed of these heavy cars. These people from the cities and towns pay a substantial license for the privilege of driving autos, and why should the farmers of the whole county be asked to provide 80 per cent. of the funds to keep up the main roads, or 20 per cent. of the roads of the county, when those license fees could be expended on such roads without the burden to the general farmer? In a letter from the Department to our Board of Trade, it is pointed out that some $14,000 was collected from within the boundaries of the county of Peterborough as auto licenses during 1917, and that there is nothing to hinder the county from earning the same back to the county by the adoption of the country roads system, and also stating that the expenditure of the ratepayers of the county would be very little increased. The expenditure of the rural municipalities now taking in statute labour at one dollar per day, all cash appropriated, all grants from the county and the meeting of debentures by the county does not reach $30,000. But to earn the $14,000 back for maintenance of main roads of 20 per cent. of the roads of the county, the farmers would have to raise $56,000.

Do not lose sight of the facts, if the Government can legislate, which we know they can, and are doing, to have all that auto license money expended on the main roads of the county through the county road system. The Government can legislate to have those same monies paid by the citizens of the cities and towns expended on the main roads those people constantly use without burdening, as stated before, the whole farming community in order to obtain the people's own money for their benefit, and to maintain the roads that are suffering as a result of the said heavy and fast auto traffic.

It has been, and no doubt will be, used as argument to induce you to advocate the adoption of the county road system that all the other counties are drawing those licenses and you are losing that much. Do not forget to get $2.00 from the Government for road maintenance. You raise $8.00 and that is expended on 20 per cent. of the roads of the county, and do not forget that the auto money could be made available without such unequal burden. Eighty per cent. of the farmers are better without $2.00 expended, where they never benefit, when it would cost them $8 to get it or, as pointed out in the letter to the Board of Trade, "earn it back."

It is not that any glory or popularity will come to me that I have taken this stand. On the contrary, it would be much easier for me to remain silent in the matter, but I am interested in the farmer, and am ready at any time to advocate his cause, and I would be sorry to see this the last county in the Province walk into a yoke that makes the farmer more or less the human ox, providing speed ways for joy-riders in heavy automobiles.—Yours respectfully,

Ed. Elliott.

39 STRIKES DURING JULY.

Time Lost was 123,511 Working Days as Compared with 62,404 Days Lost in June.

Ottawa, August 16.—The loss of time on account of industrial disputes during July was much greater than in June and greater than in July, '17. There were in existence at some time or other during the month 39 strikes, affecting 15,848 work people, and involving a time loss of 123,511 working days; as compared with 28 strikes, 11,105 work people and 40,929 working days in June; and 35 strikes, 24,986 work people, and 62,484 working days in July, 1917.

Eighteen of the strikes commenced during July, and six of those commencing prior to July, were reported terminated, leaving fifteen unterminated strikes affecting approximately 4,049 work people on strike at the end of July.

Barbers in Bronx Converse Loudly About "More Pay"

Their Topic Turns From War to Wages—Want Minimum of $20 a Week.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The barbers of the Bronx, as fine a group of artists as ever lathered an ear, held an indignation meeting and decided to strike while the towel is hot. After due consideration and undue conversation ,it was determined that war conditions, including tipless Tuesday, has driven the tonsorial trades to the wolves, and that, unless the shop owners get down on their elbows and surrender the works, not a chin in the Bronx will be nicked for the current year.

According to Frank Alter, of the Bronx local of the International Journeymen Barber's Union, the increase in cost of shaves and haircuts has literally wrenched the heart of the Bronx type of shavee. Heretofore, when a Bronx customer had been changed from a ruin to a Rembrandt with the assistance of a sane skilled and sanitary barber, it was his custom to place at least one dime in the plump palm of the operator. Of late, according to Mr. Alter, the barber has been the recipient of one hard look at the end of each tonsorial attack, and indignation has grown from a pate to a pompadour.

Three hundred barbers gathered at Bathgate Hall, No. 500 East 172d street, and, after cheering lustily at every mention of money, decided to walk out until such time as the owners of shops recover from the hot spell and consider the help. All that the men desire, as their speaker's explained at the top of their superior lungs, is to make something more tangible than lather. They want $20 a week in North American money as a minimum and they want what they earn when they get it. Furthermore and nothwithstanding, they desire half of all profits of their chairs exceeding $26 a week, and will work from eight in the morning uptil eight at night with one day off each week. The Master Barber's Association has read this demand and issued a collective growl which could be readily heard in Newark. They intimate that they would rather have the residents of the Bronx look the way they do than open their shops under such conditions.

How to Look and Feel Bright In Hot Weather

When depressed by the heat and you want to freshen up for the afternoon or evening, just bathe the face in a lotion made by dissolving an ounce of pure powdered saxolite in a half pint of witch hazel: You will find this more refreshing than an hour's rest.

As a wrinkle-remover the saxolite lotion is remarkably successful. Its action is almost magical. The deepest furrows, as well as the finest lines—whether due to age, illness, weather or worry—are immediately affected. Enlarged pores are reduced, flabby skin is "drawn in," facial contour is improved wonderfully. The simple ingredients of course can be had at any drug store, and you need not hesitate to try the lotion, as it will not harm any skin in the least.

Escaped Prisoner Wants Job Of Guarding a Pen of Germans

Enemy Submits Our Men to Harshest Treatment—Now Hate the Americans—Use Russians to Build Railway Lines in Occupied Part of France.

ARE SHORT OF SUPPLIES

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, Aug. 16.—While the German imperial propagandists are spreading lies alleging mistreatment of captured German wounded by the Americans, I got some first-hand information about how the Germans treat American wounded.

My information comes from Corporal M. P. Purvis, of the British Army, who was captured at Craonne on May 27, and who, escaping, entered the American lines near Fismes Monday. The prison camp in which he was held is at Ramecourt, thirty-five kilometers north-west of Fismes and near the main railroad which ran from the German Soissons-Rheims salient. The work he did took Purvis onto this railroad. He said he saw American wounded men on flat cars. They told Purvis they had been wounded seven days before. Purvis said (150 words deleted here).

The Germans were very short of medical supplies and all they had were used for their own soldiers. There were no anaesthetics for the wounded prisoners. They have almost no cloth bandages, but paper ones are used instead, even for their own wounded.

All Captives Cruelly Treated.

Unwounded American prisoners also are treated terribly, as are the English. Around the prison camp he had seen a number of signs, "Gott strafe England." After the Americans helped to drive back the Germans from the Marne some of these were changed to "Gott strafe America."

Corporal Purvis was a bank clerk before the war and is an intelligent man. I believe the utmost reliance can be placed in his story. All he said was corroborated by Private Isaac White, of the British Army, who escaped with Purvis.

Purvis also revealed that while Germans who were captured by the Russians are fighting for Germany in Russia, the Russians who were captured by the Germans were kept in prison camps and used as labourers by the German Army. Purvis said that the elaborate railroad system built by the Germans in the Soissons-Rheims salient was constructed by 2,000 Russians and by a number of English prisoners of war. He said the English also were used to harvest the wheat back of the German lines.

I asked Purvis to tell me exactly what the Germans fed him. He said that at 4 o'clock in the morning, when they started to work, they received one pint of "coffee" made from hawthorn berries; at 2 o'clock they got one pint of soup made from dried vegetables, and at 6 o'clock "coffee" again. Each day they received three-fourths of a pound of black bread, which smelled like swill and felt like rubber.

"The Boche is in a terrible predicament," he said. "They use substitutes for all foods and for everything, except three things — men, guns and ammunition. Thank God, they can't get a substitute for those!"

Worried by Americans.

Purvis said that the morale of most of the German troops was deteriorating. He also said that the success of the Americans was worrying them.

Purvis and his partner had an exciting time escaping. On Aug. 7, when they started out to work, it was not yet light. He and White slipped into some bushes and hid in a dugout all day. That night they walked toward the south. They kept this up until Monday morning, when they got in front of the American lines.

Dressed in dirty German prison garb, they looked in the early morning light like German infantrymen. An American doughboy rushed at Purvis with a bayonet. Purvis grasped the rifle and got it away from the American, who leaped upon him with his fists. With White looking on, they rolled about in the mud until their profanity caused each to recognize that the other was not a German, for Purvis thought that after his seven days' fight he had run into a German patrol, while the doughboy thought he was trying to repel a German attack. When they recognized one another the American escorted the two Tommies back to his mess and fed them.

Wants to Guard Germans.

When I saw Purvis he was bending over a tub of water, and two doughboys were scrubbing the dirtiest back I ever saw. It was the first time he had seen a piece of soap since the day he was captured, when the Germans started the drive which took them to the Marne. When I saw Purvis and White later they were dressed in American uniforms.

"Where to now?" I asked.

"Lad," said Purvis, "I'm going back to Blighty to ask King George to give me a job to guard one of our Jerry camps. That's all I ask in life. Give me that job for one week, and I can die happy."

"Now, if you have that in your head," said a professor, who had just explained a theory to his students, "you have it all in a nutshell!"—American Boy.

FOOD STILL SOARING.

MEATS, EGGS AND POTATOES INCREASED DURING JULY.

Ottawa, August 16.—Upward movements in wholesale and retail food prices were again recorded by the Labour Department during July. In wholesale prices the increases were chiefly in dairy products, fresh and canned vegetables, textiles and lumber. There were decreases in fodder, live stock and meats. In retail prices there were increases in meats, eggs, and potatoes, with slight decreases in milk and dairy butter. Coal, wood and coal oil and rent showed slight increases.

The index number of wholesale prices for July reached 284, as compared with 280.6 for June and 242.6 for July 1917. The cost of a weekly supply of food at the middle of July, averaged $13 in some 60 cities, as compared with $12.77 for June and $11.62 for July, 1917.

PETERBORO SIXTY YEARS AGO

The advantages of the Trent Route were thus epitomized in a letter recently addressed by W. S. Conger, Esq., to the Chief Commissioner of Public Works:

"First—It is shorter and more direct than any other—except the Toronto and Georgian Bay, which, from its great cost may be set down as impracticable, from Chicago and the Sault Ste. Marie to the Seaboard, whether via Montreal and Quebec, or Portland, or New York.

"Secondly—It passes through a rich and fertile country, and presents fewer engineering difficulties, and could therefore be constructed for a much smaller sum than either of the two other proposed routes.

"Thirdly—Being at least two degrees further south than the Ottawa Route, it would have the advantage of being open for two or three weeks longer every season.

"Fourthly—Its terminal harbours would be large and commodious—particularly that at the mouth of the Trenton, having on one side Bay of Quinte, and on the other, by a short and comparatively inexpensive cut, the Presque Isle Bay—the safest and most commodious harbour on Lake Ontario, thus affording an easy and safe entrance to Trenton from Lake Ontario to the River St. Lawrence.

"The advantages of the Trent Route in point of distance, may be estimated by the following figures:

	Miles
From Chicago to New York via Buffalo and the Erie Canal	1615
From Chicago to New York Welland Canal and Oswego	1638
From Chicago to New York via via Huron, Nipissing, Ottawa and Caughnawaga Canal	1358
From Chicago to New York via Georgian Bay, Valley of the Trent and Oswego	1232
From Chicago to Montreal via Lake Nipissing	1095
From Chicago to Montreal via Georgian Bay and the Valley of the Trent	1003

"It will thus be seen that in point of distance to New York, the Trent Route has the advantage over the Nipissing and the Ottawa Route by 126 miles. While between Chicago and Montreal the distance is in favor of the Ottawa route 28 miles; an advantage, however, more than counterbalanced by the intricate and difficult navigation of the latter."

But the pages of a work like this are hardly the place wherein to discuss the subject, and the reader is therefore requested to regard the remarks relative to the merits of the different canal schemes now before the public as parenthetical in their character.

In 1839 the townships adjacent to Peterborough had attained to sufficient importance to be set apart as a separate district. Provisional Council was established, and a Court House and a jail erected under its auspices. It was built on the knoll or mound in the centre of the town, a beautiful site, and is a substantial and handsome structure. In 1841 the new District was declared under the name of the Colborne District, in honour of the Governor, under whose auspices, the Canal survey had been projected and carried out. A new Council was elected, and assembled for the first time in the town of Peterborough, in 1841. The Council was composed as follows:

George A. Hill, Warden.
Councillors—
Monaghan—Thos. Harper, Esq.
Smith—Stephen Nichols, Esq.
Douro—Smithin D. Gibbs, Esq.
Otonabee—Thomas Carr, Esq., Jas. Doris, Esq.
Otonabee—Jas. Doris, Esq.
Asphodel—Richard Birdsall, Esq.
Emily—Josias L. Hughes, Esq., W. Cottingham, Esq.
Ops—Francis Keely, Esq.
Fenelon—John Langton, Esq.
Verulam and Harvey — Thomas Need, Esq.
Ennismore—Daniel Costello, Esq.
Mariposa—Samuel Davidson, Esq.
Eldon—Alex. Campbell, Esq.
Dummer—Alex. Kidd, Esq.
John Dareus, Clerk.

Under its new auspices the district continued to advance with great rapidity. Among the tabular statements will be found abundant attestation of this fact; and to those statements the attention of the reader is directed. They show a steady progress in each of the townships, as well as in the district as a whole that is exceedingly gratifying.

In 1846 a charter was obtained to construct a railroad from Port Hope to Peterboro. Stock books were opened, and a considerable amount, £10,000, was subscribed. Public meetings were held both in Peterborough and Port Hope, and for a time considerable enthusiasm prevailed. But the days of railway construction in Canada had not yet commenced; that most ingenious contrivance, the Municipal Loan Fund Act, had not even been dreamt of, and owing to the difficulty of raising money, the project, unfortunately for the interests of both towns, dropped.

Until 1852 but little occurred in the history of the counties to interest the general reader. The town continued to progress slowly but steadily; but it was not until that year, when Peterboro shared largely in the railway interest that about that time seized the public mind, that any marked advance was made. It was the peculiarity of the railway legislation of 1852-3, that the large proportion of charters granted had Peterboro either for a terminal point, or an important station. The interest then excited resulted in a large influx of population and an important impetus was given to every branch of industry.

Have Purchased Two More Lots

Fine Lots Secured for Site of New Church in South End.

Two additional lots have been purchased by St. Alban's Mission which, together with the three previously purchased, will provide an area of one hundred and fifty feet by one hundred and twenty-two and a half feet, upon which to erect a new church. The plans for a church have been submitted, but there is little hope of the work being started at present. It is the intention of the officials to first build a basement and occupy it until such time the additional funds can be raised to complete the edifice.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

Cleveland Owners Make Strong Appeal to Indians To Nose Out Red Hose

President Jim Dunn of the Cleveland Indians started his final pennant drive by having Manager Lee Fohl assemble all the athletes in the club house and when the bunch had seated itself and quit shuffling feet, Dunn delivered himself as follows:

"Boys, I want you to win this pennant. You can do it. You are a better ball club than the Red Sox. I know it and so do you. They are playing away from home at the present time and are losing ground. You are playing at home and gaining. But you must gain more if you are to overhaul them.

"I don't want any of you boys to feel nervous over the government's ruling. If any of you want to start work immediately at something else that comes under the government's ruling, just come to my office and I'll set to it that you are started right away. There is absolutely nothing to worry about, however, for you will all be able to finish the season and find other employment in ample time to satisfy the government officials.

'I want the pennant this year, boys, and you can deliver it to me, if you will set yourself to the task. Of course it will be a source of satisfaction to me to be the owner of the club that wins the flag, but that's not why I want it. I want to reward the fans of Cleveland for their loyalty to you through thick and thin. We have had more people patronize our games this year than any city in the American league and they have some reward coming to them. You have it in your power to produce the reward. Now if you don't think you owe it to yourselves to put your best foot forward or even to me, then by all means do it for the men, women, and children who make the grand old game possible, your loyal supporters in the Sixth city. Will you?"

That was the sum and substance of Dunn's talk, fans, and the response from the players all but raised the steel and concrete stand overhead. It was a chorus of "You bet we will, Jim" And the players meant it, too. They, like Dunn, realize this may be the last pennant race to be decided for several years to come and they will work tooth and nail to bring home the bacon.

Officers Were Elected To-day

Jack Sahrpe Was Elected Mayor of Peterboro.

The Junior Chautauqqua elected officers this morning for the duration of the entertainment as follows: Mayor—Jack Sharpe, Town Clerk, Agnes Logan. Commissioners—Robert Fowler, Vernon Fuller, Paul Koster, Marguerite Tewsley and Marcelle McNulty. The little people spent a very happy morning at the "supervised playgrdund" and were entertained by Miss Davidson, Mrs. Clayton and Miss Margaret McDonald who assisted Miss Johnson.

Yes, I Intend To But Not Now

Have YOU any idea what that decision is costing you—even if you live? Of course if you die the cost is much GREATER.

Read the following facts and then decide for yourself:
The premium you would pay for $1,000 of insurance at age 60 WOULD BUY YOU nearly $4,000 of insurance at age 21.

The premium you pay for $1,000 of insurance at age 50 WOULD BUY YOU nearly $2,500 at age 21.

The premium you pay for $1,000 of insurance at age 35 WOULD BUY YOU $1,440 at age 21.

Besides while you may be insurable at age 21 you may not be insurable, AT ANY PRICE, at the other ages mentioned.

The one great fate that touches our lives is the verdict of NOW.

A soldier at the front got short of money, so he sent home the following letter:

"Dear Mary,—We lost a trench this morning, and we must replace it at any cost, so will you please send me five pounds at once."

"Dear Jim,—Sorry, I have not five pounds towards replacing the lost trench, but I enclose two candles to help you to look for it."

FIND BABY DEAD, BUT GAS FAILED TO KILL PARENTS

Quarter-in-the-Slot Metre Supply Caused Unconsciousness for Metcalf Couple.

NEW YORK, Aug. 17. — Mrs. Christopher Metcalf was found unconscious with her dead son in her arms in her home at No. 1,775 West Sixth Street, Coney Island. Her husband was on the floor unconscious beside the bed where the mother and boy lay. The police broke into the house. Physicians said the boy had been dead two days. Mrs. Metcalf left a letter indicating she intended killing the three. One letter, addressed to a brother, Charles Georgia, No. 26 Broadway,, read:

"Dear Brother,—When you read this I will be dead. I am going to turn on the gas for Christopher and myself and also for Chris, if he is here.—Blanch."

Christopher was the son and Chris, evidently, the father. Another letter, dated August 9, and signed "Mrs. Blanch Metcalf," was as follows:

"When this reache you it no doubt will be a great shock, but I send it to you because you are stronger and it will be more easy for you to break the news than the women folks. It will be all over when this reaches you. In the envelope you will find the key for the letter box, also in the envelope you will find papers containing the deed for this house. A life insurance policy of $2,000 of my husband is in the mortgage on the house. You will also find a policy for $500 on my life and a policy for $200 on our baby's.

"I wish that our bodies be cremated and that the funeral be very simple. Then there will be money left. The home will then be free and clear."

If Mr. and Mrs. Metcalf live, which physicians said was probable, they will owe their lives to the fact that in their apartment is a gas meter of the quarter in the slot type. The jets were turned on full. The quarter's worth of the poison was not enough to kill two persons.

A partly emptied bottle of poison was evidence of how the boy had died. The physicians said the boy evidently had swallowed half the contents.

Neighbours told the police that the Metcalf family quarrelled frequently. They were unusually noisy last Friday evening. There was a crash of glass, and a woman's voice cried, "Now it's broken." Then there was silence. For two days no sound came from the apartment. Neighbours notified the police, who made a charge of homicide against Mrs. Metcalf.

Munition Workers in Germany Are "New Rich" Class

New York, August 16. — "Conditions were terrible in Germany," said Mrs. Ida M. Otz, who has just arrived here from Dresden. "We were not allowed to talk English, and if we did in the privacy of our hotel room, some German spy in the shape of a waiter or bell boy would be sure to report us, and then an officer would come around and warn us. The Grand Union Hotel, which was always the mecca for American travellers, threw all its American guests out of the house when the United States declared war.

Uses Freight Car to Beat Huns.

"For four years we tried to get out without success. When we finally got passes out of the country we found that we would be allowed to carry nothing on the passenger train with us except the clothing that we wore. I found that there was nothing in the German regulations against our hiring a freight car and attaching it to the passenger train. We had much bric a brac, porcelains and some paintings that I simply insisted that we should not leave in Germany. Had we been unable to take it along we would have destroyed it rather than to let the Germans have it. So in March we finally succeeded in getting out, freight car and all.

"Conditions in Germany were indescribable. The one time wealthy autocrates have mostly vanished, and in their places are the munition workers, whose families form the nouveau riche in the Kaiser's land.

"I was in a candy shop one day whe nan over dressed woman came in and purchased a pound of candy, for wihch she paid the equivalent of seven dollars. I asked the saleswoman whether her customer was one of the town's wealthy citizens. 'Oh, no,' she replied. 'That is the wife of a munition worker. She never had any money until lately.' That illustrates the condition in Geramny today. The children all appear terribly emaciated and the old people are dying off by the thousands. The only young or middle aged men one sees are either blind or hopelessly maimed otherwise."

The Big Issue in South Africa

Reason Why the British Will Not Restore East Africa to Germany.

The insistence of Germany upon restoration of her colonial possessions in Africa, together with substantial additions to them at the expense of France and Belgium, and the equally persistent demands of Australia, of South Africa, and of many of the public men of Great Britain that Germany must not be allowed to regain her hold upon the soil of the Dark Continent, serve to lay emphasis upon the importance assigned to that portion of the world in the years following the war.

Much was heard before, the beginning of the conflict, of the Cape-to-Cairo Railway. This great project, like so many others, has had to yield its place in the public interest; but it remains a great world issue, and at the conclusion of peace negotiations, if not during them, it will emerge as a greater one.

The significance of the British determination not to allow East Africa to revert to German hands is largely concerned with the Cape-to-Cairo enterprise. It is now realized that Germany had laid plans for checkmating both the political and the commercial aims of the great transcontinental system. German maps of East Africa, drawn before the war, show several projected parallel railroad lines crossing the German territory from the coast, and stretching out their tentacles to the Congo and beyond toward the Atlantic seaboard. These roads crossed at several points the proposed route of the Cape-to-Cairo line. Had they been completed, they not only would have enabled Germany to control strategically the whole rival system extending north and south, but to extend her grip on the entire basin of the Congo; eventually she might even have essayed to conquer, as well, the Portuguese and French Atlantic colonies.

Fortunately these contingencies are made remote by the events of the war. Germany no longer has a foothold in Africa. The course of the Cape-to-Cairo road lies entirely within territory controlled by the Allies. The war has not arrested the progress of construction, and each year some notable additions are made to the long line.

It is not unlikely that the great road from end to end of Africa will figure in the peace councils. Eradication of Germany from participation in the undertaking, and from all opportunity of continuing active hostility toward it, clears the ground for an amicable programme of joint effort among the allies, and assures a peaceful and generous development of Africa's resources. Although Great Britain, France, Portugal, and Belgium are the only nations now concerned in building up means of communication in Africa, there is indeed, a strong probability that some degree of railway internationalization will result from the peace-council endeavours to adjust the colonial claims of the belligerents. This would be a long stride in the direction of international control of Central Africa, between the Zambesi and the Sahara, as advocated by the British Labour Party, and by a growing number of publicists and statesmen in Great Britain and the allied nations.—The Bedman.

Military News

Tenders for the new barracks on Barriefield reserve have been received and were forwarded to Ottawa on Wednesday. It is expected that the decision will be made promptly as the season is already well advanced. The Department of Public Works is represented in Kingston by Power & Son, architects. The barracks proposed will be permanent buildings, and will form winter quarters for the soldiers stationed here or in training here.

NO MOTIVE

The official view respecting the disappearance of Major W. J. S. Sharpe is that he disappeared of his own volition for reasons known only to himself. Nothing in connection with his official duties or any relations with his fellow officers constituted a sufficient motive for his action. Word of his whereabouts is expected before very long.

RETURNED SOLDIERS

General Mausell has issued instructions to commanding officers of units regarding recommendations for the appointment of instructors and clerks. There are still some vacancies on the subordinate staff, and preference will be given to returned soldiers when the positions are being filled.

SIBERIAN FORCE

Instructions have been received at district headquarters to recruit quota required for the Siberia Expeditionary Force. Many applications have already been received from returned officers who are eager to go. Enlistments for this force will be received at 1st Depot Battalion, at Ottawa.

DEFAULTERS ATTENTION

There still remain eight days for defaulters under the M.S.A. to report at the depot battalions and by doing so take advantage of the provisions in the proclamation regarding immunity from punishment for failure to register or otherwise comply with the Military Sercie Act. Definite results of the Government's act of clemency will not be known until after the last day, when the provost marshal's lists will be revised by striking off the names of those who have reported to the depot battalions. It is stated that drastic action will be taken to round up all defaulters after the 24th inst., and the letter of the law will be carried out in every case.

THE ACTIVITIES OF CHRISTIAN SCIENTISTS

The activities of the Christian Scientists in connection with the war have excited much interest. At the inception of the world clash the opinion was entertained in certain circles that because of their teachings the Scientists would be likely to class themselves with the Quakers and other sects with views adverse to war. But that idea was soon dispelled. Many of the faith abroad early rallied to the colors. Then so soon as the stories of suffering in the war zone were received from over the seas, the church authorities instituted a War Relief Fund from which hundreds of thousands of dollars were sent to be used for the needy regardless of creed. When the United States became involved, the Directors issued a statement explanatory of the attitude of the church and urging loyalty that should transmute itself in all manner of service, with the result that a large number of adherents were promptly enrolled in the Army and Navy. To-day the church has recognition in the presence of Christian Scientists as chaplains in both branches of the service while in the cantonments every where there are authorized representatives who are ministering to the soldiers without interference or friction. The church also maintains a very large and successful department to provide knitted goods and various comforts for the soldiers and for relief work in Belgium and France. At the time of the Halifax explosion the Scientists in Boston chartered the first train available to rush supplies to the unfortunate, and when the Red Cross and the doctors, finding it impossible to obtain a train, asked the privilege, cars were provided that they might also hasten to the stricken city. This was one of the first relief trains to reach Halifax. These and other similar incidents have contributed to afford many a new viewpoint from which to regard those of this way of thinking, and have silenced old antagonisms, shamed to al lcreeds. HUNDRED AND SIXTY THOUSAND ADDED TO BOSHEVIKI BY WAR PRISONERS.

Vladiostok. — The situation in western Siberia leaves no room for optimism, in the opinion of the Vice-President of the Russian section of the Czecho-Slovak national council. In a statement made recently he said that Bolsheviki mobilization of Austro-German prisoners of war had added 160,000 men to the enemy forces. He said it would be impossible to reach Irkutsk, even under the most favorable circumstances, in less than a month, and that perhaps two months would be necessary.

In the hilly, waterless and sandy country beyond Irkutsk the movement of troops would be easier, but the position of the Czecho-Slovaks may become precarious if assistance is not speedily forthcoming. Their numbers are diminishing on account of sickness and impossibility of renewing supplies.

The Arctic' White City Is a Port of Mystery

Throughout the War Strange Reports Have Come From Archangel—The Ghostly Army of 100,000 Russians Who Were Supposed to Have Embarked for France.

EXTREMES OF THE SEASONS THERE

Archangel, the "White City" of Northern Russia, is once more a centre of interest. Just what has happened there, or what is going to happen, perhaps no one outside of Archangel knows with any measure of definiteness. But there are rumours. Archangel is a breeding place of mysterious rumours. It was to Archangel that Lord Kitchener was going on an embassy of mystery when he went down to his death off the Orkney Heads. It was from Archangel that that ghostly army of "100,000 Russians" was supposed to have embarked upon that mythical expedition through England and across the channel to the front in France in the early days of the war.

And now the three or four line despatches that were allowed to filter through the censorial news embargo which has been on at Archangel for some time past announce the widespread insurrection against the Bolshevist Government in Northern Russia, with its headquarters in Archangel, the withdrawal of the Soviet troops and a conference between American Ambassdor Francis and Allied representatives to be held at Archangel will decide upon their future plans." Perhaps, after all, Archangel may evolve from a centre of mystery into a centre of action and the long-promised great movement of Russian regeneration may find its genesis there.

The Largest Arctic City.

Archangel was the seat of government of Northern Russia of the old regime. It is one the right bank of the Dvina River, twenty-six miles above its entrance into the White Sea and is 740 miles north-east of Petrograd. It is the largest and most important city in the world situated so close to the Arctic Circle. It is a very ancient seaport, and for a long time was the only seaport that Russia had. The modern town, however, dates from the visit of an English voyager, Richard Chancellor, in 1553. An English factory was erected on the lower Dvina soon after that date, and in 1594 a fort was built, around which the modern town grew up. Peter the Great once lived in Archangel, while he was learning ship carpentry, and he laid the foundation for one of its greatest industries, the building of ships. The little log house that he lived in is still one of the show places of the town.

At the outbreak of the present war Archangel, and in fact all of Northern Russia was beginning to experience an awakening of commercial development. More than 800 vessels put in yearly at this Russian port. It is connected with Moscow by rail, and has another railway into the Siberian grain fields, through the Ural range, via Perm and Vistka, and before the blight of war came to paralyze its industries it was engaged in a lively trade with the interior cities of Russia as well as in seaborne exports to England, Holland and Germany. It had about 27,000 inhabitants in 1914.

The city derives its name from the monastery of St. Michael which is there. It also boasts a fine cathedral, built in the early part of the Nineteenth Century, said to be the handsomest and best lighted cathedral in Russia. The other buildings of interest are the ecclesiastical seminary, a school of navigation and a naval hospital.

Extremes of Seamen There.

Archangel is a place of seasonal extremes. For three months in the winter the Archangelite seldom sees the sun and for three months in the summer he seldom loses sight of it. The shortest day is three hours, the longest twenty-one hours, and for the greater part of the year the city lies under a mantle of snow.

From the environment of snowy white, as well as from the colour scheme of its houses, it has acquired the name of "White City." White is the prevailing colour, not only of its landscape but of its architecture. All the chief buildings glare with white paint and even the window blinds, instead of relieving the eyes of the usual green contrast, are painted white. Churches, private houses, street posts, gates, pillars, walls and fences everywhere present a glare of everlasting white colour, and beyond the city the eye roams endlessly, for nine months of the year, over glittering plains of snow.

Under the old regime, Archangel was a favourite place of evil for the milder class of political offenders. Most of the leading business men and traders, who established themselves there, originally were political exiles condemned by the order of the czar to perpetual banishment from the pleasanter parts of Russia, with the rare luxury, perhaps, of a special permit, once in a long while, to visit their old homes.

A neglected opportunity never calls again.

Truth will out—and it will out of some men so completely that it leaves not a trace behind.

Another "Scrap of Paper."

Twenty-seven years ago settlers at Olympia, Wash., made a treaty with the Indians allowing them to fish anywhere and at any time, says Commerce and Finance. Now the state game laws prohibit them from the sport during the closed season.

Saluskin, big chief of the Yakimas, with a number of other Indians, after protesting in vain to the local game wardens, went to the city to protest against the violation of their rights.

Imagine a chieftain, 90 years old, straight as an arrow, yet half blind and enfeebled, entering a court room in a modern city. This man had seen the victory of civilization in its struggle against the wilderness. He had seen his race pass control of the land to the white race. Still believing in the honor of the white man, he came to protest against the infringement of a treaty made a quarter of a century before.

Saluskin was informed by an interpreter that the district attorney could not change the state game laws.

"Hoh!" was his only comment.

Vladiostok. — The situation in western Siberia leaves no room for optimism, in the opinion of the vice-President of the Russian section of the Czecho-Slovak national council. In a statement made recently he said that Bolsheviki mobilization of Austro-German prisoners of war had added 160,000 men to the enemy forces. He said it would be impossible to reach Irkutsk, even under the most favorable circumstances, in less than a month, and that perhaps two months would be necessary.

In the hilly, waterless and sandy country beyond Irkutsk the movement of troops would be easier, but the position of the Czecho-Slovaks may become precarious if assistance is not speedily forthcoming. Their numbers are diminishing on account of sickness and impossibility of renewing supplies.

The Arctic' White City Is a Port of Mystery

Throughout the War Strange Reports Have Come From Archangel—The Ghostly Army of 100,000 Russians Who Were Supposed to Have Embarked for France.

EXTREMES OF THE SEASONS THERE

Archangel, the "White City" of Northern Russia, is once more a centre of interest. Just what has happened there, or what is going to happen, perhaps no one outside of Archangel knows with any measure of definiteness. But there are rumours. Archangel is a breeding place of mysterious rumours. It was to Archangel that Lord Kitchener was going on an embassy of mystery when he went down to his death off the Orkney Heads. It was from Archangel that that ghostly army of "100,000 Russians" was supposed to have embarked upon that mythical expedition through England and across the channel to the front in France in the early days of the war.

And now the three or four line despatches that were allowed to filter through the censorial news embargo which has been on at Archangel for some time past announce the widespread insurrection against the Bolshevist Government in Northern Russia, with its headquarters in Archangel, the withdrawal of the Soviet troops and a conference between American Ambassdor Francis and Allied representatives to be held at Archangel will decide upon their future plans." Perhaps, after all, Archangel may evolve from a centre of mystery into a centre of action and the long-promised great movement of Russian regeneration may find its genesis there.

The Largest Arctic City.

Archangel was the seat of government of Northern Russia of the old regime. It is one the right bank of the Dvina River, twenty-six miles above its entrance into the White Sea and is 740 miles north-east of Petrograd. It is the largest and most important city in the world situated so close to the Arctic Circle. It is a very ancient seaport, and for a long time was the only seaport that Russia had. The modern town, however, dates from the visit of an English voyager, Richard Chancellor, in 1553. An English factory was erected on the lower Dvina soon after that date, and in 1594 a fort was built, around which the modern town grew up. Peter the Great once lived in Archangel, while he was learning ship carpentry, and he laid the foundation for one of its greatest industries, the building of ships. The little log house that he lived in is still one of the show places of the town.

At the outbreak of the present war Archangel, and in fact all of Northern Russia was beginning to experience an awakening of commercial development. More than 800 vessels put in yearly at this Russian port. It is connected with Moscow by rail, and has another railway into the Siberian grain fields, through the Ural range, via Perm and Viatka, and before the blight of war came to paralyze its industries it was engaged in a lively trade with the interior cities of Russia as well as in seaborne exports to England, Holland and Germany. It had about 20,000 inhabitants in 1914.

The city derives its name from the monastery of St. Michael which is there. It also boasts a fine cathedral, built in the early part of the Nineteenth Century, said to be the handsomest and best lighted cathedral in Russia. The other buildings of interest are the ecclesiastical seminary, a school of navigation and a naval hospital.

Extremes of Seamen There.

Archangel is a place of seasonal extremes. For three months in the winter the Archangelite seldom sees the sun and for three months in the summer he seldom loses sight of it. The shortest day is three hours, the longest twenty-one hours, and for the greater part of the year the city lies under a mantle of snow.

From the environment of snowy white, as well as from the colour scheme of its houses, it has acquired the name of "White City." White is the prevailing colour, not only of its landscape but of its architecture. All the chief buildings glare with white paint and even the window blinds, instead of relieving the eyes of the usual green contrast, are painted white. Churches, private houses, street posts, gates, pillars, walls and fences everywhere present a glare of everlasting white colour, and beyond the city the eye roams endlessly, for nine months of the year, over glittering plains of snow.

Under the old regime, Archangel was a favourite place of evil for the milder class of political offenders. Most of the leading business men and traders, who established themselves there, originally were political exiles condemned by the order of the czar to perpetual banishment from the pleasanter parts of Russia, with the rare luxury, perhaps, of a special permit, once in a long while, to visit their old homes.

A neglected opportunity never calls again.

Truth will out—and it will out of some men so completely that it leaves not a trace behind.

Another "Scrap of Paper."

Twenty-seven years ago settlers at Olympia, Wash., made a treaty with the Indians allowing them to fish anywhere and at any time, says Commerce and Finance. Now the state game laws prohibit them from the sport during the closed season.

Saluskin, big chief of the Yakimas, with a number of other Indians, after protesting in vain to the local game wardens, went to the city to protest against the violation of their rights.

Imagine a chieftain, 90 years old, straight as an arrow, yet half blind and enfeebled, entering a court room in a modern city. This man had seen the victory of civilization in its struggle against the wilderness. He had seen his race pass control of the land to the white race. Still believing in the honor of the white man, he came to protest against the infringement of a treaty made a quarter of a century before.

Saluskin was informed by an interpreter that the district attorney could not change the state game laws.

"Hoh!" was his only comment.

The Woman Who Changed

By JANE PHELPS

PLAIN TALK

PLAIN TALK.
CHAPTER CXLVII.

The next morning at breakfast I said to George:

"What made you so late last night? I did not get to sleep until after one o'clock and you had not yet come in."

"No; it was nearly two," he replied, paying not the slightest attention to my question.

"I hope you are not going to stay out nights like you used to? I was very lonely last night."

"Just thought of it?" he asked, and there was an undisguised sneer in his voice.

"Why—yes. You know I have been so busy with the baby since I have been around that, when night came, I was tired and so didn't think much about your being out."

"So I perceived. I hope you have not forgotten that I dislike to be questioned. I hoped that you had outgrown the habit."

"I question you very seldom." I was piqued. I had not asked him where he had been or what he did for months, and the very first time I mentioned it he found fault.

"That is too often. When where I am is of special interest to you, I will tell you."

"Very well. I shall ask you no more questions," I returned then in a burst of indignation; "I soon shall begin to recognize that being your wife carries no privileges. I try to please you but it seems that to do so, I must make up my mind to live with you almost as I would with a stranger."

"Don't be silly!" and when he went out he, for the first time, slammed the door.

A RESOLVE

I was so astonished at George—at him slamming the door that I forgot my indignation. Then suddenly it came over me that I had really been to blame. I knew only too well that he would not be questioned, yet I had deliberately asked him where he had been. Then I had been rather horrid when he replied that when he had anything of interest to me he would tell me. I was not keeping my word to Mrs. Sexton. I had promised her that I would not do the things that I knew angered George.

"Your husband is a peculiar man. I am sure that he loves you dearly, but you could easily lose his love if you kept him in a state of annoyance. Some men throw such things o, but not men of his type."

From that time on I never asked my husband any questions. That is nothing referring in any way to his actions, the way that he spent his time. I tried to become more reserved and tactful. And I was not without my reward. George often told me how improved I was that I had grown in every way to be more attractive. If I thought that others might not agree with him I never gave the thought expression. It was him, and him only to please.

When the baby was about six months old we took up our social duties again. We had been so long out of things, we had accepted so many beautiful flowers, and so received so many expressions of regard, and congratulation, that we felt we owed nearly everyone we knew some form of entertainment. So I necessarily had to spend less time with Keeneth, which Evelyn's mother-in-law told me was the best thing that could happen. We had a thoroughly competent nurse so he was in no way neglected. And the nurse did not humour him as I did.

GEORGE TALKS OF INDIVIDUALITY.

That winter we were very gay. we entertained at least once a week, we subscribed for the opere, we attended the theatre and concerts. We accepted so many invitations to dine that I laughingly told George we might as well have no cook. Then in the early summer we took the baby and went up to Maine and remained for the summer. We fished and roamed over the woods, we spent long lazy happy days together, just George and I. There was no friction between us that summer, and he often spoke of it as we sat on the porch after the rest of the household were in bed.

"Men and women are so foolish," I remember he said one night, "instead of giving each other the liberty God intended that they should have, they try to mould the other to their own desires; their own way of living and thinking. We are individuals, Helen, and we can no more get away from our individuality than we can from our ancestors. You are emotional, naturally show your feelings at the slightest thing; whereas I am just the opposite. You cannot make me emotional; I never have succeeded in teaching you to conceal your feelings. Yet, because we are together, because we care for each other, we are each sensibly changing. Perhaps you more than I. You are learning that it is undignified, bad form, to show your emotions to the world; and I am learning to show you that I am not the cold blooded creature you have always thought me. But in all vital things we will always show personality, individuality. You recognize that fact, and so do I. But in spite of it we are about as happy as the average, don't you think so?"

"Perhaps—but—George—I want to be happier than the average."

To-morrow—Deep Waters.

Taken Literally.

Wishing some bushes removed from his garden, a gentleman instructed his gardener to pull them up by the roots. Some time afterward he went into the garden and found the gardener digging trenches to find the bushes.

"Why, George," he said, "you must not dig round those small bushes in that way. I am sure you are strong enough to pull them up by the roots."

"Oh, yes, sir," replied the gardener; "I'm strong enough, but I must dig a little before I can get hold of the roots. If you'd told me to pull them up by the branches I could, of course, easily have removed them without digging." — London Strand Magazine.

Children of Criminals.

It is a curious fact—one all at variance with the doctrines of heredity, but borne out by police records—that the children of crooks, of all classes, rarely turn out to be crooks themselves. Deeper study of the subject might reveal that they are possessed of the criminal instincts, but that the tragically close example of the punishment and wretchedness that attend a criminal career has been a terrifying deterrent. The fact, at any rate, remains. The rogues' gallery of Scotland Yard may be studied in vain for the photographs of a father and a son.

Story of a Russian Rising

By WARREN MILLER

I am a Russian; I served three years in a Siberian prison; I escaped in time to join the revolution that deposed the czar who sent me to that horrible life; consequently I have but one thought, to see my country under such a government as will give her freedom within and save her from being enslaved by another imperial master from without.

Being in Petrograd soon after the last revolution, I went to a man who was a member of the provisional government, told him how I had planned and executed my escape from prison and asked him if there was any work I could do to serve my country in her struggle for the preservation of that liberty she had so suddenly grasped.

"You are just the man we want," he said, "for a certain purpose. In Moscow there has secretly arrived a man from New York who is a leader among a certain class of fanatics, or rascals, I am not sure which. We believe that he has come over here to take advantage of the clamor of our simple peasants for the land to work for an anarchistic movement. We can do nothing to head him off without a definite knowledge of his object. You can serve Russia best by going to Moscow, representing yourself a friend of that man's course, getting his plans from him and bringing them here to the provisional government."

I accepted the commission and went to Moscow. The man whose confidence I was to attempt to win still lives and I do not care to mention his name, nor that mine should be known in this connection. I have no desire to receive a thrust in the back in return for what he would call my treachery. I shall call him Scoraloff.

When I reached Moscow I found that Scoraloff was keeping very dark. I represented myself to a woman as a Red and she being a Red herself gave me her confidence. In her enthusiasm for the cause she took me to Scoraloff and introduced me as a helper of their cause. I will not dwell upon how I won her confidence. It is enough to say that I won it.

When I had learned all that I wanted to learn of this communistic plan, I suggested that I would be glad to carry any orders Scoraloff might have for those associated with him in Petrograd. In this I made a mistake. My object was to be passed back to the capital in order to furnish the information I had gained to the provisional government; but I saw by Scoraloff's expression that he suspected me of being a spy. However, his suspicion was apparent only for an instant. He gave me a password that would enable me to go to the capital without being stopped by any of his conspirators.

Scoraloff really wished a messenger he could trust and gave me a letter written in his own hand to his chief abettor in Petrograd containing numerous instructions. Before setting out on my return journey I read the letter and was disappointed that no date was mentioned for the rising.

I had not gone far on my journey when I felt some one touch me on the shoulder, and turning, saw a man who ordered me to follow him. I did not know whether he was a government official or a Red. I had a pass on my person signed by an officer of the government for all loyal persons to pass me and assist me in official business. I suspected that this was a Red so I gave him the Red password. He paid no attention to it, but took me to a house in the lower part of Moscow and led me to the top story, where, opening the door, I was ushered into a room in which sat a man at once I knew to be a Red. No one but a Red would have been lodged in such a place. My life was at stake, for in case I was searched the order of the government would be found and would stamp me for a spy on the Reds.

The man before whom I was taken went about an examination of me very adroitly. He said that he had received an order from Scoraloff to intercept me for the purpose of adding to the instructions he had given me. I was invited to take a seat and received a pumping to discover whether I was as I pretended a Red or a government spy. I coolly asked the man's permission to smoke and having received it produced a box of cigarettes which I offered to him. He took one, I another. I struck a match, held it to him, then to my own, and we began to smoke.

After a verbal examination he told me that he had no doubt that I was what I purported to be, but Scoraloff's orders to search me were peremptory. I was stripped, inspected and every article of my clothing was carefully examined. Nothing was found to incriminate me and after a hearty shake of the hand I was suffered to go my way.

Why was it that my voucher from the government was not found?

Because it was written on the wrapper of the cigarette he had smoked. While he was pumping me he was burning the only evidence against me.

I arrived without further interference at Petrograd and warned the government against the danger that threatened it; but I could not give the date of the proposed uprising and found those at the head of affairs disposed to rely on moral sussion. Therefore my trip was of no avail.

Had the man who interviewed me not been a smoker I would not have lived to tell this story.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

An Atlantic Episode

By CHARLES LEWIS PHIPPS

I confess that in going about my chief pleasure is watching other persons.

Coming over the Atlantic ocean to America on a liner I picked out a mother and daughter as worthy of my attention. A young man had been introduced to the daughter, who seemed to be very well pleased with him. The mother was also well pleased that the daughter was well pleased. The young man was well pleased too. What struck my delicate perceptive faculties was that the mother's pleasure in the matter seemed to arise from a sense of relief. How or why I inferred this I can't explain. A woman would understand it without an explanation. As for a man, you couldn't stick it into him with a hatpin.

These two young things were getting on like two mating turtledoves when one day, the girl being on deck, I saw her go to the stern of the ship. The weather was bad, and I was the only other woman on deck. I scudded along after the girl on the other side of the smokestack and deckhouses till she reached the limit to the first class part of the ship and she stood looking out on to the second class part. A young man appeared. He saw the girl, but he didn't see me, for I was crouching under a lifeboat. He threw a kiss to the girl, who, after looking around to see that she was not observed, returned it in kind.

Now, wasn't that interesting?

Of course it wouldn't have been half so interesting if it hadn't been for the other young man the girl had met on the voyage. She was fooling her mother with him. The real lover, whom the mother condemned, was traveling second class so that it wouldn't be known to the girl's mamma that he was on the ship.

Now, what was the upshot of all this? In order to keep track of it I must be up and doing. I mustn't let the slightest incident escape me.

And I didn't.

A couple of days after this, when it was stormy, I, remembering that lovers chose just such weather to send kisses, went on deck early and stayed all day, having a steward bring up my lunch. About dusk the girl came up, and I knew by her looks that something was on. She didn't know it, but out of the corner of my eye I saw her scowl at me. I was the only woman on deck. She didn't care for the men. She could fool them, but she couldn't fool me.

That girl scudded along to the after part of the ship without any one seeing her except me, and just as the darkness was settling down she was lost to view.

In about an hour from that time there was the biggest racket aboard that ship you ever saw. The girl had disappeared, and her mother was wild about her. One or two of the men who were on deck when she came up reported having seen her, but none of them saw the last of her. But her mother abused them so frightfully for not keeping an eye on her, especially as the ship was rolling badly, that after awhile one of the sailors said:

"Missus, we didn't want to hurt yer feelin's. The truth is I saw the young lady skiddin' along till she struck the port rail about midship, and afore I could get my hands on her she toppled over."

This, if it had not been for the distress it gave the poor mother, would have been amusing. I was bound I wouldn't give the girl away, and yet I couldn't bear to see the mother suffer. We were to reach port the next morning, and somehow I doubted if the mother believed her daughter had gone overboard. The latter knew mighty well that she was trying to keep her from a young man, and I don't doubt that it was probable she was somewhere on the ship. She had a thorough search made of the first class portion and a perfunctory search made of the second class, but none of the steerage.

I didn't know and I don't know now how the lovers managed it, but I know what I would have done had I been one of them. I would have gone, at least temporarily, from the second class cabin to the steerage and remained there till the fuss blew over. They could easily have got some emigrant clothes and, besides, could have dodged any one looking for them.

The next day nothing was said about the girl who was seen to plunge into the ocean. The passengers were busy getting ready to go ashore, and perhaps they hadn't time to concern themselves about a person they didn't even know personally. Seeing a group of three persons standing together waiting to go down the gangplank I approached them. They were the mother and daughter and a young man who bore a strong resemblance to the second class passenger who had been throwing kisses during the voyage. The mother looked sour enough to bite off a nail. The daughter looked ill at ease, but the young man seemed to be quite proud of himself.

The only way I could find out about what had taken place was to remain aboard till after the passengers had gone ashore and interview some of the officers. This I did and learned that the girl having joined her lover in the second class part of the ship was married there and returned before midnight with her husband. It was agreed by all that since the ship would soon reach port the matter need not be explained.

FATE INTERVENED.

By WILLARD K. FIFEN.

[Copyright, by American Press Association.]

"Well, well, Cuthbert! Who'd ever have expected to see you here? Isn't it funny what meetings there are in this world? Last time we met was at San Francisco. You were going to sail the next morning for Manila. Everything in this world is arranged by fate. But the most singular feature of all is that I've got a message for you. Are you married?"

"No."

"How's that?"

"Fate."

"How has fate kept you from marrying?"

"Chucked in a contemptible incident the evening of the day I parted from you at San Francisco."

"What incident?"

"Come in to the club and I'll tell you."

"When I parted from you that day I went to my quarters, donned evening dress—I never wear a uniform off duty—put on a pair of new patent leather shoes—stiffest things in the world; they might as well be made of cast iron—and went to dine at the quarters of my commanding officer, then Colonel, now General, Chatterton.

"The situation was this: I had been proposed as a husband to Margery Chatterton, the general's daughter, by a skillful matchmaker and had been accepted. When the matter was proposed to me the proposer didn't know that the first moment I saw Miss Chatterton I remarked to myself, 'That's the woman of all others I want for my wife!' You can understand, then, how easy it was for me to be steered into that particular matrimonial hive. The arrangement having been perfected, our mutual friend warned me not to make a botch of it by hurrying, but preface my proposal by a proper amount of courting. Instead of being stayed I should have been hurried, for, while I had found no difficulty when at West Point in making any number of sham proposals, when it came to the real thing I was ready to sojer with the most backward man in the army. I put the matter off till the dinner I have mentioned came round, when, sitting at table, I was handed a telegraphic order direct from Washington to sail on a ship leaving the next morning for Manila.

"I read the dispatch to the company, and of course it created a flutter in the breast of Miss Chatterton, distinctly visible on her countenance. Here I was ordered away, and the expected proposal had not been made. Mrs. Chatterton, who was dead set for the match, as soon as coffee was served said that if I didn't care to smoke I might join 'the ladies' in the library. I knew very well that by 'the ladies' she meant Margery, and I said that I would join them as soon as I had drunk my coffee.

"I would have left the dining room with them had it not been for the fact that, sitting so long in one position, my feet had become swollen, and the inelastic patent leather had held them as in a vise. I had slipped off the shoe that hurt me most, and when the ladies arose from the table I rose, too, and stood in one shoe. The general and the adjutant, who was of the party, remained, and when the ladies had gone I felt (with my feet) under the table for the missing shoe. I could not find it. While I was trying the general said to his adjutant, 'We must settle Swinton's case before you go,' and to me: 'I trust you'll excuse us, captain. We've got an important matter on hand that we must tackle.'

"I was mighty glad to excuse them, and as soon as they were gone I got down under the table to hunt for the shoe. While I was there the door opened, and I heard Miss Chatterton exclaim:

"'Well, I declare!'

"I put it to you as a man, could I crawl out from under the table and in one shoe face the girl who was awaiting my proposal? I knew very well that, hearing the men go out, she had come in to sit with me while I sipped my coffee, intending then to guide me to a place where we would be alone together. I lay still as a mouse for a moment, when I heard the dining room door close and knew that I was again alone.

"It was evident to me that I must lose no time in getting my shoe, find Miss Chatterton and give her a satisfactory explanation as to where I had been when she had entered the dining room. But in the first place I couldn't find the shoe, and in the second I couldn't invent an excuse. It occurred to me that if I could get away undetected I would have a whole night to make up a plausible story, return in the morning before sailing, account for my conduct and do the job. A window opened on to the veranda, and"—

"Why in the world didn't you walk right into the presence of the girl and tell her the whole story?"

"Why don't you say something I don't know? I've asked myself that question a million times since."

"Why didn't you go back the next morning?"

"Ship sailed two hours ahead of time. The only thing I've been able to do since has been to let the matter go by default. But how do you know I didn't go back? And what's the message you have for me?"

"Well, at Manila you told the story to Jones of the Eighteenth —. Jones told his wife, his wife told mine, and mine, who is a bosom friend of Miss Chatterton, told her. Miss Chatterton told my wife she'd never marry any man but you. That's the message."

"Shake, old man! I'll attend to the matter at once."

The Food Value of Bananas.

As long as we are trying to make the best use of everything within our reach in the way of foods, let us not overlook the ever-present and inexpensive banana, which is called the "poor man's fruit" for these very reasons.

The potato and the banana have points of similarity in that both are of an alkaline nature and are especially valuable where there is a tendency toward the development of acid in the stomach. The caloric value of bananas is very high; in fact, it is claimed to be greater than that of any other fruit in its natural state. We feel a certain sense of security in eating it also because its enveloping skin affords a perfect protection through the many handlings it has to undergo.

Some people find that the banana sets a bit heavily on the stomach, and, as a rule, this fact is due to the unripe condition of the fruit. Unripe bananas are indigestible for old or young. When the yellow of the peel takes on a rich, golden hue and begins to speckle freely with brown spots and shades, the "poor man's fruit" is at its best. Even when the brown discoloration spreads, the fruit is still rich and ripe and at its very best for consumption until the pulp begins to show signs of decomposition. Then all such parts should be discarded as unfit for food.

Young children do not digest bananas well for the very reason that they do not masticate them properly, and unless the banana is very ripe it has a high starch content. These two conditions make digestion difficult. However, when the ripening process takes place, this starch is almost completely changed to sugar, and much larger quantities of this form of sugar may be given than of pure sweets without causing intestinal disturbance.

American people are often surprised at the abundant consumption of bananas among the little people of our foreign population, and that, too, without apparent injury. This is because the foreigners eat the fruit when it is just ripe enough. Nevertheless, parents are wise not to allow young children to run the risk of being disturbed by eating raw bananas until sufficient powers of digestion are present to make it safe.

Sweet fruit juices, strained, are desirable body regulating substances for young children, even babies, but fruit pulp, such as that of the orange, grapefruit, cherry, banana, pineapple and raw apples, is best withheld from the young child. A scraped or baker apple may be permissible before other fruits are allowed, but bananas are not usually given until after the sixth year. Then they should be ripe and thoroughly masticated.

Take Your Own Food.

Three things impress the American, William Beebe writes in the June Atlantic, on the first day of his arrival in Paris. The first is the deliciousness of the crusty war-bread; the second and third—but there is space here only for his story of the war-bread: "Sugar and bread are scarce enough to be given special thought. The Baron de —— would be delighted to have you take dejeuner with Madame la Baronne and himself; then follows a little postscript, 'Apportez un peu de pain, si vous le voulez'—and we trudge Baronwards with four inches of the most excellent war-bread in our pocket!" Mr. Beebe adds that the shortage is, with many people, one of money rather than of the staff of life itself.

First Coined Money.

To Lydia, the industrial power of the ancient world, belongs the honor of having issued the first coined money. The earliest known coins were stamped on one side with a lion's head or the figure of a king with bow and quiver. So far as we know the first coinage of gold dates from King Croesus of Lydia. It is impossible to say just what form the earliest money (medium of exchange) took. Probably it was cattle, from which our word pecuniary comes.

Learning the Ways of Europe

By WARREN MILLER

When I was a young man, after finishing my education, before settling down to the practice of my profession I made a tour in Europe. Taking ship for Naples, in ten days I found myself in that city, and after visiting the curiosities there took a train for Rome.

I should have first landed in England, the European country most like America, and made my way through France southeastward to Italy. In this way I would have gradually become used to the extortions travelers were subjected to in the peninsula. As it was I was very ignorant of them.

While in Rome I hired a cab to take me to see the baths of Caracalla. The driver, I noticed before stepping into the vehicle, was not of the usual type of cabman. He was dressed shabbily, as cabmen are dressed, but his looks belied his appearance. He was extremely deferential, but his defereace was more like that of a gentleman than a cabman.

I knew nothing of Rome or its environs. Whether he was driving me to the baths of Caracalla or not I did not know, but he took me through one of the Roman gates and out into the country. On the way we overtook a young woman, dressed in the fantastic colors worn by the Italian lower classes. The coachman drove slowly, speaking a few words to her.

She looked at me through the cab window and I noticed that she was comely. What the cabman said to her I did not know, as he spoke in Italian. He pulled up and the woman approached the cab, saying:

"Signor, would you object to my riding a short distance with you? I am very tired and I have walked all the way from the Piazza Esquilino in the city."

An American is nothing if not obliging, and throwing open the door I made room for her beside me.

She was rather a large woman, though the only unfeminine thing about her was her voice. But I had noticed that many Italian women have coarse voices. She carried a bouquet of flowers which emitted a singular perfume. She held it under my nose that I might enjoy its fragrance, which was sickening. But to be polite I inhaled it. I had not taken a whiff before I felt my senses passing away from me.

The woman kept holding the flowers under my nose at intervals, I not having the power to put them away, and at last I was in oblivion.

When I came back to consciousness I felt assured at once that I was underground. The darkness was relieved by a couple of candles which were fixed to the walls. Two persons were with me, one being the cabman who had driven me, the other a man whom I recognized as the woman who had held the flowers under my nose. The cabman had spruced up a bit in his appearance, and the man who had personated a woman was well dressed in man's clothes.

I was sitting on a cold floor, my back resting against a wall. The place were occupied was about 12 by 15 feet in area, a narrow passageway leading from either end. Human bones protruded here and there from the walls, and on one side of the space was a marble coffin.

"Where am I?" I asked of the men who were looking down on me with evident composure.

"You are in the catacombs, signor."

"Why did you bring me here? I told you to drive me to the baths of Caracalla," I said, only partially having regained my senses.

"My friend the cabman," said one of them, "wants to make sure of his pourbois (naming an extra fee with which to buy a drink) and feared you would deny him. So we brought you here until it is paid."

I was not so stupid but that I knew I was in the hands of bandits. I asked how much ransom would satisfy them. They named 50,000 lira, or about $12,000. I told them that I had only money for traveling expenses. I would give them that for my liberty; but they told me that I must cable to America for the funds required for my ransom. I told them I had no such amount in cash even in America.

With this they coolly took the candles and left me.

In the catacombs, with their endless tortuous passages but a few feet wide; the burial place of generations who had died more than fifteen centuries agone; alone; not a ray of light. I was ready to give up a property I possessed four times the value of the ransom and at once began to think how I could raise the funds. My property was unencumbered and money could be easily borrowed on it. The bandits evidently knew the effect leaving me alone in the catacombs would have on me for they returned in a few minutes.

I wrote a cablegram to my agent in America and gave it to my captors. One of them went away with it, the other remaining with me. The latter disappeared for a few moments, then returned with a hamper filled with a sumptuous lunch and plenty of wine. With this I was regaled till the other returned with the ransom, when they took me to the surface, where they bade me a polite adieu. I was too happy to escape being buried alive to brood over the loss of the money.

Her Presentment

By F. A. MITCHELL

Extract from a letter from Miss Estelle Harrington to her friend, Belle Stanford:

. . . I have not before this found an opportunity to write you since leaving you last September, though I have had something especially important to tell you. You will remember that when I left you I said "I have a presentiment that I will meet my fate." I have since made up my mind that presentiments, like dreams, foretell the opposite. I met a man, the very day I parted from you, but instead of being a lover he treated me abominably. He accused me of stealing his scarfpin.

When the train reached Beverly it was quite dark. The station was badly lighted, and you know my eyesight is not of the best. The oculist says I must wear glasses, but glasses are not becoming to me and I will not. When I left the car I saw a young man evidently looking for some one he expected to arrive on the train. I was absolutely sure he was Will. I hastened to him and threw my arms about his neck. He disengaged them and looked at me like a thunder cloud.

"Pardon me—excuse me—" I stammered. "I thought you were my brother."

He lifted his hat politely and all would have been well if I had not looked down to avoid his gaze and seen something glisten on the floor. I picked it up and was looking to see what it was when the man said in a freezing tone:

"I'll trouble you for my scarfpin."

"Your scarfpin," I replied. "I—I—thought it was something I dropped."

"It's my scarfpin and I would advise you to return it immediately. There is a policeman over there."

I stood feeling like a snow image. To think that the fellow should have mistaken me for a thief. Then, handing him the pin, I said: "If you do not know a lady when you see one I certainly know a gentleman. I would not advise you ever to pose for one."

This brought him to his senses. He began an apology, but I turned away from him and, seeing Will coming toward me, joined him. But I didn't kiss him till I was sure he was my brother. We left the station together, got into the car and went home. I hope it will be "my fate" to meet this man again. Won't I give him a piece of my mind! . . .

Mr. Arthur Troop to his chum, Alec Harding:

. . . By the by, I was at the station the other evening looking for my sister, Cornelia. When the train came in a strange girl alighted and, making straight for me, threw her arms about my neck and kissed me. My scarfpin fell on the floor and I thought she had put up a job on me. She said she thought I was her brother. I made an ass of myself, threatening to call a policeman.

A few evenings after this I went to a dinner and dance at Mrs. Van Winkles. Who should be seated at the dinner opposite me but the girl I had insulted. She looked at me as though she considered me only to be touched with a pair of tongs.

After dinner I inquired who she was, and learned that she was living with Mrs. Van Winkle, at least temporarily, and the affair was given for her. Wasn't it odd, though, that she had given me a bid, not knowing that I was the fellow who had insulted her? As soon as I knew that she was in her own home, so to speak, I laid my plan. When the dancing commenced I marched up to her and asked her to dance with me.

As I expected, she turned her back on me. Since then I have stopped worrying about her. I'll tell you some more bye-and-bye. . . .

Miss Harrington to Miss Stanford:

. . . When I last wrote you I said I would like to meet again the man who accused me of being a thief. Well, I have met him and he proved himself a better diplomat than I. Indeed, instead of crushing him, he crushed me. Aunt Sarah gave a dinner and dance for me, and who should be one of the guests but this young man. His name is Troop. After dinner, while we were dancing, he had the assurance to ask me to dance with him. I turned my back on him and walked away with all the dignity I could muster. Everybody in the room saw me do it.

This lady called me to her and asked me what it all meant. When I told her she said that I must apologize to Mr. Troop for refusing to dance with him, he being one of my own guests. This upset me completely, for my adviser was a thoroughbred and well versed in social requirements. I simply could not do it. But I did as well. I went to Mr. Troop and asked him to dance with me. We sailed away, neither of us referring to what had gone before. I had thought that I could not do such a thing and survive; but after it was done and he was so deferential and attentive to me I was well satisfied with myself.

Mr. Throop to Mr. Harding:

. . . I haven't told you the result of my having accused a lady of being a thief. Well, instead of apologizing to her she apologized to me. I am dead in love with her and if I can't win her I'm going to jump in the canal.

Miss Harrington to Miss Stanford:

. . . I am engaged to Mr. Throop. After all, I believe there is something in presentiments. I did meet my fate, didn't I? . . .

BURIED TREASURE.

Story Which the Natives of Peru Have Handed Down.

There has always been fascination for man in lost or sunken treasure, and this again has been brought home to us by the many attempts which have been made lately to recover from the ocean bed bullion which has laid there for centuries, and in some cases a few weeks only.

The sinking of the Empress of Ireland in the St. Lawrence River has added to the number of ships which have taken to their grave beneath the icy waters valuables which are essential to the works of man.

Divers are now endeavoring to recover the bullion aboard the Canadian liner, for there are men still willing to risk their lives in the recovery of treasure from wrecks, as in the old days men were ever ready to go into unexplored lands in search of riches reported to be buried there.

The treasure of the Incas of Peru is among many that have defied the efforts of expeditions to locate, and even to this day no definite clue has been found of the many million dollars worth of gold buried on the approach of the Spaniards into the interior of the present republic.

One of the stories of these lost treasures relates to a Cuzco white man of Spanish descent whom the Lord blessed with numerous children. It is the custom here that a godfather shall look after and provide for his godchild; and so, as this man was poor, he tried to add to his resources by getting a corps of good godfathers.

So as the infants came one after another he named each in honor of one of the distinguished citizens of the town. The citizens, however, did not respond and the man grew poorer and poorer. At last he had nine babies, each of whom had been given a rich godfather, but there was no help forthcoming. The father swore that he would leave the rich and choose as the patron of his next child the first man he met on the street after its birth.

In due time the stork came again, and the man, rushing out, saw a poor Indian driving a caravaan of llamas into the town. He stopped him and told him he wanted him to be godfather to his child.

The Indian objected, saying that he was poor and not fit to be godfather to a white child. The man then told of his vow and finally persuaded the Indian to accept the position.

In due time the baby was baptized and the Indian appeared at the ceremony as its godfather. He kissed his godson as he left the church and the next day came back into Cuzco with a score of llamas, loaded with wood. He took this wood to the father of his godchild, saying that he had brought what he could and that he must accept the wood as a gift.

The man was thanked and the wood was duly stored away in the court of the house. Some time after that the bundles of sticks and roots were opened, and inside of each was found a great bag of gold in nuggets and dust. In the meantime the Indian had disappeared and could not be found.

The man took the gold and built two large houses on the street called Triumph. If you do not believe this story come to Cuzco, and the people will show you the street and point out the houses.

Balancing an Egg.

All the world knows how Columbus on a historic occasion made an egg stand on end. After many learned theories had been advanced on balancing the egg he set the egg on end by, of course, mashing down the shell enough to form a base, but the problem is capable of still another solutions. It is an easy matter to set an egg on a plate, for instance, if you know how. The trick is impossible until the eggs has been boiled in an upright position. The position of the hardened yolk at the end of the shell lowers the centre of gravity until the sphere can be spun or even balanced with ease.

Why He Left His House.

In the Paris Louvre is a famous art collection, valued at £800,000, which was given to the institution by M. Camille Groult. In the collection are some of the finest works of Watteau, Fragonard, Reynolds, Gainsborough, Turner and Constable. M. Groult's house on the Avenue Malakoff was so interesting that Alexandre Dumas fils once told the collector that he could not understand why he ever wanted to leave it. "I will tell you," replied M. Groult; "it is for the pleasure of entering it again."

The Bilious Habit

Some people have bilious spells about ever so often until they get to be a habit.

The liver is at fault. Get the liver right by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and the bile will not collect in the blood until it poisons you.

There is no one organ in the human body which has so great a control of health as the liver. Hence the far-reaching effect of this treatment.

TRAMP STEAMERS.

The Wandering Freighter Roams About Seeking a Cargo.

Why are some ships dubbed "tramps"?

Well, they are tramps just as some individuals are tramps. They go here and there, just as circumstances may dictate looking for employment.

But there is this difference—the tramp we meet on our roads says he is looking for work, but often enough he is secretly praying very hard that he may not find it. The ocean tramp simply has to find it. If she doesn't there is trouble. More, although some ocean tramps are dishevelled in appearance, by far the greater proportion of them have not the slightest suggestion about them of the untidiness of the tramp on which the policeman has to keep such a wary eye.

As a matter of fact many modern cargo boats are of huge dimensions, bearing comparison with the liners which quite a few years ago were regarded as prodigies of size. A tramp of six thousand tons is quite an ordinary vessel in regard to its dimensions. There are many much larger, and, of course, hosts much smaller.

They go anywhere. Where there is cargo to be found there is also the ocean tramp. She is bound to no particular port of call. She may be in the Orient one voyage, and in a short time may be nosing round the ports of, say, South America. Then freights from Mexican and American ports may show greater profits, and forthwith our tramp is off on a series of voyages between the Old and the New Worlds, until perhaps more profitable work offers elsewhere.

Throwing the Dart.

In widely differing communities—Venice and Cork—there obtains a curious ceremony, that of throwing the dart. In the first case this is an ancient custom signifying the marriage of the Adriatic. Every year, since 1177, on Ascension day, Venice has been made the bride of the sea, and the throwing of the dart is a picturesque feature of a picturesque ceremony.

Equally interesting are the circumstances attaching to the similar functions on the first Thursday of September in Cork harbor, Ireland. By virtue of a clause in the city charter the mayor of Cork is constituted admiral of the port. Every three years he must evidence his jurisdiction by throwing a dart into the sea.

At 2 o'clock in the afternoon the mayor, the town council, all the civic officers and the band of the Cork Civil Artillery embark on a vessel and proceed to a point between Poor Head and Cork Head, which is held to be the maritime boundary of the borough. The mayor dons his official robes, and attended by the mace and sword bearer, the city treasurer and the town clerk, likewise wearing their official robes goes to the prow of the vessel and launches into the sea a dart made of mahogany tipped and winged with bronze, in this way asserting his authority as lord high admiral of the port.

The Distinguishing Mark.

"My wife has a twin sister who looks so much like her that you would not be able to tell them apart."

"I suppose it has become easy for you to do so?"

"Yes, but it wouldn't be if my wife showed the same respect for me that her sister does."

Pedagogues and Marriage.

Two bright faced academy boys were discussing their teachers.

"Mr. Blank's going to get married, I hear."

"Gee, I hope not."

"Why?"

"Because Mr. Dash got married last year and now he's fierce."

Official War Office Reports

BRITISH OFFICIAL

Canadian Press:

LONDON, Aug. 19.— (Official.) — Near Merville, at the apex of the Lys salient, the British have made further progress. Fifty prisoners and a few machine guns were captured. A German counter attack between Outterstein and Meteren was broken up by British artillery:

The statement reads:

We captured a few prisoners last night in the Ayette sector and also south of the Scarpe river, where our patrols entered the enemy's trenches and penetrated some distance into his position. North of the Scarpe a hostile raiding party was repulsed with losses. During the night our troops made progress in the Merville sector, in spite of the opposition of hostile machine gunners. They captured between 40 and 50 prisoners and a few machine guns.

Early in the night the enemy launched a counter attack against our new positions between Ruttersteen and Meteren. The attack was completely broken up by our artillery and machine gun fire. The total number of prisoners captured in yesterday's successful operation in this sector is not yet available. The hostile artillery has shown some activity south of the Somme and has been active southwest and north of Bailleul.

FRENCH OFFICIAL

PARIS, Aug. 19.— (Official.) —Between the Oise and the Aisne the French troops attacked at six o'clock last night over a front of 15 kilometers between Sarlepoint, between four miles east of Ribbecourt and Fontency ,and approximately six miles west of Soissons. They advanced an average distance of two kilometres over the whole front. The French have occupied the plateau west of Nampiel, about seven miles north-west of Fontency and the edge of a ravine south of Andignicourt, two miles and a half east of Nampoel. Nouvron Vingre was captured. Seventeen hundred prisoners, including two battalion commanders, were taken in the operation. There were violent artillery actions north and south of the Avre river during the night.

The statement reads:

During the night there were violent artillery actions north and south of the Avre. The number of prisoners counted in the region west of Roye yesterday exceeds four hundred. Last evening about 6 o'clock the French troops attacked to rectify their front between the Oise and the Aisne. The attack was over a front of about 15 kilometres from south of Carlepont to Pontency. We have realized an advance over the whole line to an average of two kilometres, approximately. We have occupied the plateau west of Nampoel, reached the south edge of the ravine at Andigncourt and captured Nouvron Vingre. Seventeen hundred prisoners, including two battalion commanders, were captured. The night was calm on the rest of the front.

A Drowning At Inverlea

Patrick Healey Was in Bathing at Inverlea Park—Got Beyond His Depth.

The Otonabee took its first toll of the bathers at Inverlea Park this afternoon at 3 o'clock, when Gerald Healy, the 7 year old son of Mr. Patrick Healey, 172 Dufferin St., lost his life while bathing on the east side of the river, north of the Smith street bridge.

The little lad had gone in the deep part of the river, although unable to swim, and sank before help could get to him.

Bernard Park son of Dr. Park, who is an excellent swimmer, made a valiant attempt to save the boy, but he slipped from his grasp as he went down the third time.

The body has not yet been recovered and is presumably under the bridge where he sank. The pulmotor was called.

PATROL FIGHTING

With the British Army in France, August 19. — On the new Somme front local fighting continues, the entente allied forces biting off pieces here and there all along the line.

Patrol fighting has continued, and there are some indications that the enemy has made up his mind to withdraw from the present front but would rather go back in contact with British so as to inflict all the casualties possible by the free use of machine guns and without himself risking many of his own men.

Intense shelling and bombing of the enemy rear areas continues. At no point has the enemy organized attacks against the new outposts of the British.

Submarines Accounted For

It is Estimated That at Least 250 U-Boats Have Been Destroyed.

(Special to Examiner.)

London, August 19.—(British Admiralty wireless.)—The naval correspondent of the Sunday Observer says that in addition to the one hundred and fifty submarines which Premier Lloyd George recently declared that the British navy alone had sunk, that a good percentage of the "doubtful cases" may be regarded as destroyed, and that the number may be safely raised to two hundred.

Another fifty have probably been destroyed by the French and Americans. To say that two hundred and fifty submarines have been accounted for may be regarded as a modest estimate.

The crews of the destroyed vessels are either drowned or are prisoners, and must number at least 8,000, of the most highly trained German sailors. Probably the number is a great deal more.

Bread Production in Peterboro

It Costs a Little Over Six Cents to Produce a Pound of Bread.

A report issued by the Labour Department gives some figures on the production of bread in Canada. For one pound of bread in Peterboro, it cost 6.521c. In April of this year a barrel of flour cost $11.10 in this city but in May of this year it cost only $10.98. In the month of May 73,467 barrels of flour were manufactured but only 37,007 barrels were used for home consumption.

In all of Canada for the same month 19,286,911 pounds of bread were made.

Automobile Was Badly Damaged

Car Belonging to Mr. Coulthard Ran Into the Ditch.

Mr. Wm. Coulthard damaged his car badly this morning when he ditched it to avoid a more serious accident. He was coming in from his cottage at Chemong at 9 o'clock following close in the wake of a farmer's cart when, without warning, the farmer turned into his own gateway. To avoid running into the man Mr. Coulthard who had not time to stop his car ran into the ditch. He himself escaped unhurt.

French Troops Made Additional Gains To-day

Enemy Resistance is More Pronounced—Heavy Fighting in Some Localities.

INTENSE SHELLING

(Canadian Press.)

London, August 19. — (3.30 p.m.) French troops penetrated into the village of Lehmel, on the hills west of the Oise and northwest of Ribecourt, to-day, according to advices from the front. During the fighting to-day the French were on the aggressive, and made some slight headway against determined German resistance between Lassigny and the Oise.

BODY FOUND

Later.—The body of Gerald Healey was recovered this afternoon at 4.15 by means of a fishing pole.

Instead of resprinkling small articles which have become too dry to iron, hold them in the steam of a teakettle.

RESCUED WOMAN FROM DROWNING AT YOUNG'S POINT

Summer Visitor at South Beach Had Fallen Through Stop-Log Gate at the Dam—Saved by Mr. P. P. Young.

DESERVING OF RECOGNITION

While making a short cut across dam at Young's Point on Friday evening, Mrs. Bland, a guest at the South Beach Hotel, fell through the stop-log gate into the water immediately above the water wheel of the power house. Her screams were heard by Mr P. P. Young at his home nearby. He hurried around the river side of the power house just in time to see a body come to the surface and sink again in the eddy. Mr. Young jumped into the water and succeeded in catching hold of Mrs. Bland when she re-appeared. By this time she was unconscious. Mr. Young held her head and shoulder over one arm, and with the other supported himself and Mrs. Bland by grasping the water wheel which, fortunately was stationary. His calls for help quickly brought assistance. With some difficulty a skiff had to be let down under the power house to reach the imperiled couple. When rescued Mr. Young was greatly exhausted and Mrs. Bland was still unconscious, but revived shortly afterwards.

Mr. Young has saved a considerable number of lives while he has been lockmaster at Young's Point, and his friends feel that some recognition of his courageous work should be made. It has been suggested that an effort should be made to secure for him the medal of the Humane Society.

The French Troops Have Penetrated Hun Positions to Depth of Two Miles

The Attack Began Last Evening—Two Main Battle Fronts Joined Up—German Positions Seriously Threatened by the Advance—Heavy Losses Inflicted on the Enemy.

A NUMBER OF TOWNS CAPTURED

Canadian Press:

LONDON, Aug. 19. — The French tenth army, which attacked German positions between the Oise and the Aisne rivers last night, has penetrated to an extreme depth of nearly two miles. Enemy machine gunners are resisting desperately and the German air service is also very active.

St. Mardies Triot, over a mile southwest of Roye, was taken by the French yesterday, according to reports from the battle front. The French also captured the town of Beuvraignes, 2 3-4 miles south of St. Mard.

The new French line runs from Fontenoy to the ridge south of Adigniecourt. From there it runs to Nampoel, which the French have surrounded, and extends to the edge of Montague Forest. It passes about fifeen hundred metres south of Carlepont, and finally joins the old line north of Tracyleval. The French now hold rather important high ground to the south of Addignicourt.

Line Threatened.

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, August 19. — The attack between the Oise and the Aisne, by which the French joined up the two main battle fronts was started at six o'clock Sunday evening, it was learned to-day.

The advance seriously threatens the German positions eastward along the Aisne, it is declared. Since Saturday, the French have advanced three kilometres (a mile and three quarters) on this front. French pressure continues on the three mile front west of Roye, between St. Mard and Beuvraignes, where a number of German prisoners were taken yesterday, and also northeast of Canny-Sur-Matz.

Heavy Losses.

Canadian Press:

WITH THE BRITISH ARMY IN FRANCE, Aug. 19.—British troops, after capturing Outtersteen Ridge, in front of the town of Merris, have beaten off a vicious counter attack and inflicted heavy losses on the enemy. More than five hundred Germans were captured by the British. The Ridge was captured by the British yesterday, and the Germans counter attacked last night and this morning. The position, which overlooks considerable ground, held by the enemy in the direction of Bailleul, is now firmly in British hands.

Desperate Resistance.

PARIS, Aug. 19. — The Germans, though exhausted, are desperately resisting at Roye, preparatory to the supreme effort necessary to extricate themselves from their dangerous position.

Meanwhile the enemy is constructing an unusually powerful defensive line to protect Nesle, six miles northeast of Roye.

Territory Recaptured

Three Thousand Prisoners Captured By the Allies in the Past Twenty-Four Hours.

(United Press Service.)
(By John De Gandt.)

Paris, August 19. — The French are in the suburbs of Roye. The British are carrying out a flanking movement north of the town. Extraordinary artillery fighting is reported in the whole Roye sector. The Germans in a desperate effort to hold the town, are pouring in fresh divisions which have been withdrawn from other parts of the town within the past twenty-four hours.

The attack between the Oise and the Aisne started yesterday evening, has resulted in the capture of thirty square kilometeres of territory. The French are in possession of the important heights west of Nampoel and are aiming at the envelopment of the Ourscamps forest "between Ribecourt and Carlepont," with a resultant control of all the roads leading northward to Noyon.

In the last twenty-four hours the Allies have taken more than three thousand prisoners.

Americans Gain Ground

United States Forces Only Four Miles From the German Border.

(United Press.)
(By Frank J. Taylor.)

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMIES IN FRANCE, Aug. 19. — American troops advanced slightly beyond Frapelle this morning and last night and consolidated the ground won in yesterday morning's attack.

The Germans in retaliation, dropped 2500 shells in Frapelle, but failed to drive out the Americans. (Frapelle is in Alsace, five miles east of St. Die, and only four miles from the German border. It was captured in a surprise attack Saturday morning.)

West of Gebweiler forty-five Boches attempted to raid American positions, but were driven off by artillery fire without being able to reach our lines. (Gebweiler is in German Alsace, 12 miles north of Mulhausen. The lines are about four miles west of Gebweiler and ten miles inside German territory at that point.) There was lively patrol activity in the Woevre area.

THE REAL WORLD SERIES

Whether or not there will be a baseball "world series" is not clear. In any event there is not as much interest in it as other years. Folks are too busy thinking about the greatest world's battle ever fought.

Most people want to have some part in that struggle. Millions are already doing not only their "bit" but their utmost. There is great need of increased food production and that need will continue after the war. The world has been short-rationed for many months and every person in Canada must do his utmost to produce and conserve food.

POSITION ALARMING

Canadian Press:

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 19.—Telegraphing from Petrograd, the correspondent of the "Dusseldorf Nachrichten" quotes the Russian newspaper "Pravda" as saying: "The Soviet Government will declare war on Entente Allied countries. Soviet officials have issued an appeal stating that Russia's position is alarming. Russias' intervention is necessary. The removal of the government to a safe place, consequently, has been decided upon, and Cronstadt, the fortress of Petrodrad, has been chosen as the seat of authority. ST. PAUL'S CHURCH, NORWOOD, SHOWS MANY IMPROVEMENTS

St. Paul's church, Norwood, which has recently undergone extensive improvements, was formally re-opened yesterday morning by his Lordship Bishop O'Brien, who celebrated Pontifical High mass, assisted by Rev. N. McNulty, C.S.B., deacon, and Mr. Kevin Corkery, sub-deacon. In the evening at 7.30 o'clock the newly erected Stations of the Cross were blessed by Bishop O'Brien, whose sermon dealt with the "Way of the Cross" and the merits of this devotion. His Lordship also preached in the morning, sketching the history of St. Paul's church, referring to the splendid mural paintings and expatriating upon the place of the parish church in the community.

St. Paul's church will celebrate its Golden Jubilee on August 6th, 1919, the date of its 50th anniversary. Those who have recently visited the church declare that it is one of the most beautiful of rural churches in the province. The painting are the work of P. C. Brown and Company, Toronto. The extensive work on the interior is enhanced by the reterracing of the lawns and other outside improvements. The pastor is Rev. Father McCarthy.

Large congregations attended the morning and evening services yesterday.

SPANISH AND TRADE.

Now that the study of German is becoming less popular the substitution of Spanish should be given serious consideration. Spanish is the dominant language of South America and it is to South America Canada must turn for much of her export trade after the war. South America is rich in resources but is not a manufacturing country. It is not likely to be, because it has neither coal nor water power. To trade with South America Spanish is necessary. This was one of the great advantages of Germany in the fight for South American commerce. The German commercial agent spoke Spanish fluently.

The German in South America owed his success before the war to these factors: (1) He quoted prices in the currency of the country. (2) He arranged to alter his products and way of packing to suit the demands of the country and its laws. (3) He made prompt deliveries. (4) He spoke Spanish fluently. The currencies in use in South America are easily learned. Our manufacturers can make their products to suit the tastes of the consumers. Our goods are the equal of any other country. Prompt delivery could be arranged. But the learning of Spanish can be facilitated only through its encouragement by our educational institutions. The United States is fostering the study of Spanish in high schools and universities and if Canada is not to be out-distanced in the world's warfare for commerce at the close of hostilities the Province will have to bestir themselves.—Toronto News.

WHAT CAN PETERBOROUGH DO

Guelph's housing scheme has foundered on the rocks of high prices, according to a Saturday news item. Tenders for seventeen stucco board houses were from 15 to 20 per cent. above the Housing committee's estimate, and the business men who instituted the movement have apparently abandoned it.

The decision will doubtless have a dampening effect on the Peterborough committee which had shown signs of interest in the local situation. The initiative here was the correct one. Business men took the pains to ascertain from the employees of factories the number of men who would be prepared to buy homes under the proposed scheme that was indicated by the Provincial Government. It was expected by many citizens that this seed of activity was germinating, and that presently the committee would proceed to the next step. But, doubtless, the Guelph experience ends it all.

The problem of finding houses for our surplus population and for those persons who are moving to Peterborough remains unsolved. The attitude that "it can't be done" is merely reactionary. If the houses that are needed in Peterborough are not built until the cost of material returns to the old price level before the war there is little hope that this city will continue to grow. From the present outlook the war will run into the latter part of 1919, according to accepted opinion and it is more than likely that war prices will prevail in the first year of peace. Considering these probabilities, the future promises only inaction.

In the meantime there are some dwellings building in this city. They are all too few, but the fact that some citizens find it attractive to proceed now with the erection of houses encourages the belief that a housing scheme is not impracticable. There is no doubt that building is beset by war time prices of material and labour but must the city resign itself to unprogressiveness, in fact to retrogression, without a serious effort to relieve the present scarcity? Any retarding influence the Guelph experiment may exert upon local initiative will not be flattering to local enterprise and to the ability of our citizens to solve their own problem.

EVENTS IN RUSSIA.

Rapid developments in Russia during the past week encourage the hope of the ultimate re-establishment of an Eastern front. Following the report that Allied forces, assembled at Archangel, had advanced one hundred miles south on the road to Vologda comes the unexpected news that a British column had pushed through Persia to the Caspian Sea and reached Baku. The first American troops of the proposed Siberian expedition have landed at Vladivostok, joining forces with the British, French, Japanese and Czechoslovaks. These undertakings to assist the anti-Bolshevist Russians bristle with difficulties of transportation and the maintenance of communication, apart from the political uncertainties arising out of the chaos that has rent the country since the Revolution.

Fears that Allied intervention would be misunderstood by the people it was intended to help seem to have been groundless. News despatches announce that the presence of Allied troops in the Archangel district has aroused the Russians, who, it is stated, "are more anxious than ever to fight for their freedom." Men are reported taking up the arms they had carried home when they were demobilized after the treaty of Brest Litovsk. Leon Trotsky, the Bolshevist War Minister, recently referred to the enthusiasm of the Czechoslovaks, who threaten the Red Guards' occupancy of Moscow, and lamented the irresolution of the Soviet troops. Further evidence of the declining influence of the Revolutionists was contained in recent reports that both Lenine and Trotsky had fled from Moscow, and unconfirmed despatches on Saturday announced their arrivals at Helsingfors, Finland.

In brief, the past week has witnessed the auspicious effectuation of the Allied plans in the East, and though the obstacles that confront the several expeditions tend to moderate our expectations of success, the first progress inspires the hope that Germany will soon find it necessary to divert some of her repleted divisions from the West. It is a huge task the Allies have undertaken in their effort to revive the national spirit of Russia and repair her fighting strength, but the prize is worth it. Its success means the end of German domination in Eastern Europe, and the reception the first Allied contingents have received is a reassuring sign that the Russian soldiers, led by their officers, who are scattered throughout the country, may yet present formidable resistance to the Austro-Germans, and, perhaps, restore the Eastern front.

LOST HIS BAROMETER.

Count Zeppelin Says General Butterfield Sneaked It Away.

Count Zeppelin, the inventor of the dirigible balloon, is not a stranger to the United States, for he saw service with the Union army in the war between the states. In his recently published reminiscences he tells this amusing story of General Butterfield, who was chief of staff in the Army of the Potomac:

In planning operations General Butterfield attached special significance to knowledge of the probable weather conditions, and for this reason he became especially fond of an excellent aneroid barometer that I had obtained from London and paid a lot of money for.

He saw this instrument in my tent, borrowed it from me, then found it impossible to give it up. He kept it a longer time each time he borrowed it, until at last he failed to return it at all. When I was about to leave the army I asked him again and again to return it, and I finally became so pressing that he said he would go to his tent and fetch it out.

After waiting outside a long time I followed him into the tent. It was empty. With my barometer in his hand he had crawled under the canvas and disappeared.

Building to Please Everybody.

"Have you started to build your house yet?"

"No. We haven't quite decided what we want."

"You haven't? I thought you had that all planned out months ago."

"So we did, but Aunt Jane didn't like the living room, so we changed that to suit her, and Uncle Bill thought the porch ought to be different, and we changed that. Then Cousin Kate insisted that we'd never be satisfied without a music room, so we had to rearrange it to put that in, and my folks thought we ought to have a butler's pantry, and her folks were sure we couldn't get along without a room in the attic, and we're waiting now to earn what color an uncle in Honolulu thinks the roof ought to be."—Detroit Free Press.

STUDIES FROM MOVIES.

The Deposed Emperor of China Has a Novel School.

The dethroned Emperor of the Celestial Empire—still a mere child—is permitted to retain his full rule over state in private life.

He is living with a dozen or so of very exalted relations of the Imperial clan in a great country palace some distance outside Peking, and is being educated almost entirely by picture films.

"The boy," says a Chinese maquess of the third degree, involuntarily inclining his head as he referred to his fallen emperor, "is a fine little fellow, and could be very happy if circumstances would permit of his living in Europe on the enormous income which still remains to him and has been guaranteed by the Republic.

"But, unfortunately, the imperial one must be jealously guarded and preserved from outward communion with ordinary people and especially from 'foreign devils.' Otherwise most extraordinary revolution is occurring in what is the usual education of an imperial prince of China, and particularly in that of a young emperor.

"He is actually being 'informed,'" continued Mr. Thang, "that there are other lands outside China, and of equal, even greater, power; that there are a fair number of kings and emperors on this earth, and that they are not barabarians, as was ever the creed in China in regard to other nations, but might be considered by an unprejudiced mind as passably civilized. These things are being impressed upon the boy-emperor largely by kinema pictures.

"Hundreds of films have been imported into China showing European cities, and also Japanese and Indian scenes. The interior as well as the exterior of houses and palaces are depicted, and everyday life of prince and peasant, with all the grades between, have been filmed for the Imperial teaching. The emperor is being made acquainted with the faces of monarchs and statesmen and of other leading men of the world outside China.

"The boy is shown pictures of marching armies and of fighting ships of every description. He is not bored with technical scenes, first, because he is too young, and, second, because wonders of machinery or intricate manufacture are hardly novelties to the Chinese mind.

"But the boy is being taught the history and habits of Europeans and many other things which, if he lives, may inspire him some day to place himself and his acquirements at the service of his country.

"What may happen then is, as you say, on the knees of the gods—we say that also; but if ever the millions upon millions of China become civilized and capable of taking the initiative like Europeans—well, there will indeed be something of a Yellow Peril."

"Chinamen, properly armed, properly drilled, and instilled with the lust of conquest, could sweep Europe even as the Tartars, who became Teutons, did in the days of Attila. I am an educated Chinaman, was sent to Europe for schooling. Fortunately for 'foreign devils'—perhaps for us also, you are thinking—there are not many of us who are educated."

Her Choice.

They were sisters-in-law and reasonably well disposed toward each other. One was the mother of George, aged six months, and the other was the mother of Marian, aged six months and four days.

"Marian does not seem to grow very fast," said the mother of George, with a suggestion of commiseration in her tones. "George is much taller"—(height being measured in inches).

"Perhaps he is," replied the mother of Marian coldly, "but Marian weighs more."

"Oh, well," responded the sister-in-law, with a smile of high bred superiority, "of course I should not wish George to be gross."

Nearly Turned.

The car was crowded, and while collecting fares the conductor had stumbled twice in two minutes over the feet of Willie Smith, and, seeing that the aforesaid Master Willie was quite the smallest passenger on board, he had a nasty suspicion that on each occasion a foot had been put out deliberately to trip him.

"Some people seem to have mighty awkward sons," remarked the conductor, casting a malicious glance toward the mother.

"Yes," replied the lady thus addressed; "that's exactly what I was thinking about your poor mother!"—London Tit-Bits.

Reading That Sticks.

An old lady, says the editor of the Ladies' Home Journal, was discussing the differences between the old and the new. "We hadn't anything but the reading book to read when I was a girl," she said, "but I know the best parts of that so I can say them to myself now. I'm sitting here in the dark, and my grandchildren don't know what they read last week! It soaked into me and it drips off of them." The editor concludes: "So what drips off, but that which sinks in is of real importance, stays with the reader and affects and develops character."

Of Course He Swooned.

While the judge was giving his charge to the jury in the burglary case one of the jurymen fainted. His lordship had just impressively said:

"Gentlemen of the jury, in arriving at the verdict you must take the testimony of the witnesses for the defence into consideration and give them full weight."

At the words "and give them full weight" the juryman swooned away. He was a coal merchant.—London Mail.

On the Trail.

"Do you see that man going along with his head in the air, sniffing with his nose?"

"Yes, I know him."

"I suppose he believes in taking up the good, pure air?"

"No. He's hunting for a motor garage, I believe."

MOTORCAR PROGRESS.

Standardization of the Parts and What That Means.

Ask any engineer what feature of modern motorcar construction represents the greatest improvement and advancement in design, and he will say not the automatic engine starter, the six cylinder engine, but standardization.

That may be a word which means but little to the car owner, but he unconsciously derives untold benefit from it every day that he runs his automobile. By reason of it he has only to ask for a certain kind of spark plug and he knows it will fit the cylinder, he has only a dozen or so different sizes of tires from which to select the one adapted to his car, and even the carburetor may be replaced by one of a different make without any change whatsoever in the bolt holes or attaching flange.

A vital part of the motor or running gear may be replaced by a blacksmith or local machine shop from the ordinary sizes of stock carried on hand, and the screw thread sizes as now used conform to a certain standard that renders replacements exceedingly simple. Grease cups, nuts or bolts that may have been lost may be replaced at the nearest supply store or garage, for no longer does each manufacturer work only to his own specifications on these minor parts.—H. W. Slauson, M. E., in Leslie's.

Giving Birds a Chance.

If man's instinct as a hunter could have been diverted from birds to insects the history of economic affairs, and especially of agriculture, would have been very different. But he has continued killing birds, not merely as a sport, but often for greedy traffic, long after the need to do so passed away. The time has come when governments must take serious thought for the protection of bird life in order that plant life on which human sustenance depends may not be jeopardized and destroyed.

Anxious to Please.

"So you are expected to do a kind act every day?"

"Yes," replied the Boy Scout.

"How about to-day?"

"Well, the teacher has been having a little trouble with me. Don't you think I might stay away from school and give her a rest?"

And on Washday, Too!

Mrs. Winchester, a councillor's wife in Worthing, England, who died on Monday, April 20, was born on a Monday, christened on a Monday and married on a Monday. Before she was married her name was Munday.

A MODERN SLAVE MART

TRAFFIC IN HUMAN CHATTELS STILL GOES ON IN MOROCCO.

On a Certain Day In Each Week In Fez and In Marrakesh Men, Women and Children Are Offered For Sale—Auction Begins With Public Prayer and Then the Buyers Examine the "Goods."

I had for many years had an idea that slavery to-day was dead, even in Africa, so far as the buying and selling of men and women were concerned. But I know different now. And I suppose my mistake arose from having heard so often when a boy at school about the "Abolition of Negro Slavery," the "Putting down of the Traffic in Slaves," etc., etc., with sundry eulogiums on Britain's glory thereat! However, as I have just said, my eyes were opened three years or so ago, when I spent some time in Morocco, says a writer in a London magazine.

I do not intend here and now to describe at length the mysterious city of Fez. There is the new town, and the old one, respectively named Fez-el-Jedid and Fez-Bali. The streets are very tortuous and extremely narrow, as in most Moorish towns; there are many fine gardens, especially those belonging to the Sultan. Of course, all the houses are flat-roofed, and generally of three stories; the number of mosques is great, and many are very beautiful.

Under the guidance of my astute and clever Moor, who seemed to know all sorts of folk in Fez, both high and low, and got leave for me to view many things I should certainly not have viewed otherwise, I had two or three very interesting days in Fez. But the chief attraction to me—for it was the one thing I was never likely to see outside Morocco, was the slave market.

Here, on a stated day each week, you can buy almost any sort of slave you may wish. They stand in rows, or in small gangs—men, women, and children, though the two latter classes predominate, and the woman-class is largest of all. Sometimes they are fully dressed, generally they are not. For when a Moor wants to purchase a slave-girl he usually is very far from being willing to buy "a pig in a poke," as we say in England. He has a keen eye for appraising a good female figure and beautiful features, whether white, black, or copper-colored. And he is not giving any big price for an old or incapable slave, even of the woman kind, let alone of the male type.

My guide, friendly and somewhat old acquaintance as he was, could not be got to say where the slaves came from. He professed utter ignorance of this, beyond saying that caravans brought them from across the desert! Sometimes the slaves are sold privately, and sometimes by auction, for there are regular "auctioneers" engaged in this business, and the slave goes to the highest bidder. There is often strong competition for a really fine-looking girl, of from sixteen to thirty, and the bidders often get excited over this, not a common thing for Moors in most matters.

The buyers walk leisurely round the market, surveying the slaves offered for sale, feeling their limbs, and examining them, much as men buying horses or cattle do in our land. And the slaves themselves, for the most part, are sullen, or at least indifferent, though now and then you, watching closely, may see the scornful curl of the lip of a young woman, as some fat, old, ugly Moslem leers at her when about to bid, or feels her arms and body in order to place a value on her. And sudden flashes of eyes and quivers of lovely nostrils prove that these slaves have not lost all interest of feeling, despite their wretched plight.

It is something, however, to be able to record that, for the most part, once they are bought, the slaves are generally well-treated. The Moor does not like to lose the full value for money spent; also the authorities, so far as they can keep an eye on the women in a house, and, whilst allowing the Moorish master a very wide latitude indeed with regard to his wife, or wives, and female slaves, they do not allow him to ill-treat even the latter on the lines of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." And so the slave, once purchased, whether meant to live in Fez or in a distant part of Morocco, generally settles down to a more or less prosaic and satisfactory life, as an inmate of the Moorish household.

These slave markets at Fez and Marrakesh, known as the "Sok-el-Guezel," are unique of their kind in Northern Africa. A visit to the latter market was at Fez. The ground of the "Soks" is strewn with clean sand, and the walls enclosing the Sok have several recesses, covered so as to shelter buyers and spectators from the hot sun. The slaves at Marrakesh stand within little places in an arcade, about the middle of the market; and one custom obtains there which was not in evidence at Fez, or at least I did not see it namely, when the auctioneers wish to make a woman slave appear specially attractive, after first showing her more or less a la the Garden of Eden, they dress her up in really fine clothes, borrowed for the occasion, ere they offer her for sale, to show prospective buyers what a beauty she would make, as an additional wife or inmate of the harem.

It certainly made me think furiously, as the French say, to find that the Dilals (auctioneers) began the sale with public prayer.

The auctioneer lead the slave by the hand round a circle, for general inspection. After a bid is made the auctioneer tries to get a higher one, by constantly repeating this bid, and enlarging on the beauty, or strength, or capability of the slave.

Cheerfulness is half of health. On the contrary, sadness and discouragement hasten old age.

TURKISH WOMEN.

They Are Gradually Obtaining Their Emancipation.

It is generally thought that Turkish women are far behind their Western sisters in intelligent and independent thinking.

This, however, is not the case, for during the last few years, the Turk's womenfolk have made great progress in learning. In fact, the educated Turkish women, the writer of the article continues, is in many ways far ahead of our Western sisters, for she is generally a linguist, and while we allow our daughters to spend most of their time in sport, the Turkish girl is kept as a rule more strictly to her studies, and as a result she can discuss politics and most other subjects of general interest with an ease that would astonish the average English girl.

It is obvious, therefore, that the Turkish woman should assert herself and emerge from her seclusion—not by discarding the "Charchaff," but by seriously taking up some work that will either help her financially or give her some more wide and general interest than she can possibly find if she remains at home hiding her talents behind the "kafess."

Europeans are too apt to imagine says a Turkish correspondent, that Turkish woman as some one clad in diaphanous draperies and completely shut off from the world. It is for the Turkish woman to prove that she is, if anything, more capable and able to take her part in life than many of her European sisters.

There are many large companies and institutions in Constantinople that would be only too willing to employ women clerks could they but find good and accurate workers. Why, therefore, should not Turkish girls apply for such employment, especially as several are already employed in the new telephone company?

The Turkish woman has again an important part to play in her country's history (she did great things in ancient times) I am quite convinced, and I believe that she can only begin to play that part by associating herself more closely with the business and public side of life, and by doing so she will not only help herself, but her country also in a very real and efficient manner.

I think I am right in saying that there are many Turkish women to-day who would like to take up some serious occupation, either from pecuniary motive or merely as a matter of interest outside the home life. For obvious reasons this was impossible in the past, but now, with the constitution and its happy relaxation of many of the old restrictions that so handicapped the Turkish woman, things have changed somewhat, and the time is right for her to take a part in the outside world.

Ancient Music.

Exploration in Bible lands has led to the discovery of a wealth of materials throwing light upon the arts and crafts which are referred to in the Old Testament. The discoveries relating to music have a charm all their own, and excavations at Nipper show, among other things, a shepherd of 6,000 years ago sitting on the grass with a lamb on one side of him and his dog on the other, lazily plucking at the strings of a leathered-covered lute. Prof. Garstang unearthed three actual instruments of Beni Hassan—a large harp, a pair of long reed flutes and a timber drum—all found in tombs dated between the age of Abraham and that of Moses.

Beating the Bakers.

"Oh, I am almost tired to death," said the woman who spends half her time addressing club meetings. "Our political economy club has been in session all day passing resolutions and drawing up petitions demanding a law regulating the price of bread. Only think! Three dollars' worth of flour costs, when baked into bread, $13. It's outrageous. We'll soon all be bankrupt. The bakers must be made to feel the power of the law. You should have been at the meeting."

"I couldn't come, I was too busy," said the calm faced woman.

"Busy on a club day? What at?"

"Baking bread," said the calm-faced woman.

Origin of the Word Academy.

Academus was a wealthy Greek of Athens who lived several hundred years before the birth of Christ. Among his possessions was a beautiful grove, where young men used to congregate and listen to the teachings of wise men, such as Plato and Socrates. This developed into the school of modern times, and these modern schools take their name "academy" from the old Greek Academus. The real meaning of the word academy is a school for boys.

Colliding With a Planet.

Our small earth is not absolutely safe from collision with bodies in space, but is safe from collision with any planet in the solar system and with the sun. To be hit by a planet either the earth or the planet must leave its orbit. This is impossible, and it is also impossible that the earth can leave its orbit and fall to the sun. The earth is being hit by millions of meteors daily, from the size of pin heads up to the largest, several hundred tons in weight.

Her Opportunity.

The man hater had just announced her engagement.

"But you always said that men were horrid creatures," said her friends.

"So they are," replied the bride to be, "and here's my opportunity to punish one of them."

They all agreed that it was real noble of her.

A Useful Device.

A combined foot-rest and lunch case has been designed for automobile uses.

Leave It to Bragg.

"Bragg enlisted, I hear. I wonder what kind of a soldier he'll make."

"Don't worry. He'll give a good account of himself."

AUTOMAT BEATS MAN.

Mechanical Chess Player Can Make Competitor Keep to the Rules.

Is the day near at hand when science will be able to create a human being? This question may well be asked when one considers the latest invention of that king of automat inventors Senor Torres y Quevedo, member of the Spanish Academy of Sciences. Senor Torres caused a sensation some thirty years ago by inventing a machine which would solve algebraic equations. Then he invented a balloon which would direct itself and could attain a speed as great as the fastest Zeppelins.

The latest product of this wonderful laboratory, says a Paris dispatch, is a machine which plays chess and which seems actually to accomplish the work of a human brain. Senor Torres thus describes his own invention:

"It is true that the game which the automat plays is not very complicated, but, nevertheless, for its opponent to win he must know how to play. The automat uses the white king against the castle and the black king. Its game is won in advance, but it must follow a certain course which leads it up to the finish.

"When the automat's opponent moves the black king the automat begins by seeing if the movement conforms with the rules of the game. If not it protests by lighting a lamp. If the move is according to the rules the automat, taking into account the position of the three pieces decides what is the best move and then makes it. Thus the game continues until the automat has checkmated the black king.

If the automat's opponent should make a mistake, as I said before, the automat protests by lighting a lamp. But it will tolerate only three mistakes. Then all its lights go out, and you may move your pieces as much as you want—the automat has finished. If you wish to begin a new game you invite the automat by a special movement to play another game. If it accepts it will turn out all its lights, place its pieces on the board in their original positions, then wait for you to make the first move.

"The old automats, the most celebrated of which were those of Vaucanson, imitated the appearance and the movements of man. To-day this idea has been abandoned, and intricate machines, which look like nothing but machines, have taken their places. The self directing torpedo is a good example of an automat. The difficulty does not lie in the work of its helmsman, but in the determination of the movement to be executed. The machine deduces this movement from indicators by purely mechanical means. This, as in the calculating machines, is the brain-work of the man that the machine accomplishes.

"It is not to be denied that automats can have sensitive organs (monometers, thermometers, compasses, etc.,) permitting them to recognize the circumstances which determine their movements, but science refuses to admit that they can possess the analogue of a brain. But I believe I have shown that this possibility theoretically does not offer the least doubt. Automats can be made as complicated as one may wish."

Daguerre.

The inventor of the process of photography was Louis Daguerre, born at Cormeilles, France, in 1789. He was first employed painting scenes for the theatre, and while thus at work he discovered the method of representing night and day by the illumination of a transparent canvas painted on both sides. This was in 1822, but as early as 1814 Nicephore Niepce had made some experiments of photography on metal. In 1826 he and Daguerre became partners, but in a few years the former died, leaving Daguerre to develop the remarkable art. The French Government gave the medal of the Legion of Honor to the inventor of the daguerreotype.

THE FIRELESS COOKER.

Some of Its Advantages as Regards Economy.

Whatever opinions might have been held in regard to the merits of the fireless cooker as a regular substitute for heat, it cannot be denied that it is a very great convenience during warm weather.

Among the advantages gained by the use of the fireless cooker are these: A cool kitchen during the day and no odor from cooking. Then, again, food cannot be overcooked, even though it stays in the cooker beyond its allotted time, so if one forgets or is busy in the garden, there need be no fear of food spoiling. Left over the fire it might burn and this not only means waste, but the cleansing of greasy, scorched cooking utensils.

The cereal for breakfast can be prepared over night and found thoroughly cooked and steaming hot in the morning. And since cooking in the fireless is long and steady, inferior cuts can be made into very savory dishes that will eat much more tender than if cooked in the usual way.

A fireless cooker should be a boon to the housekeeper at the summer camp or cottage, because it will do the work, while the family plays, and need no watching either.

It is an economical way, too, in that all the nutrition is retained by using the fireless, also the natural flavor of all foods is preserved. There is no chance for escape. Seeing, then, the fireless has so many advantages it seems singular there should be any objections against it.

Those women who believe in it claim that the reason why others refuse it is because they looked for miracles from the fireless and were disappointed. Then they at once condemned it wholesale and took no trouble to experiment. It requires intelligence to bring good results by this method of cooking, as well as by any other. While the food will cook itself, it must be properly prepared of course. There are certain rules to be followed if success is to be the result. For instance: The saucepan must always be filled to the brim either with food or water, as the case may be, as a stew will come up to the top, and if vegetables are cooking the water must reach the same height. When vacant space is left the heat escapes.

No intelligent woman would put food to cook over a fire and let the fire go down so that the water ceased to boil and still expect the food to cook properly, but some people seem to expect that the fireless cooker should perform such a miracle.

Never open the cooker until the necessary time for cooking the contents has expired. In such a case the pot must be reheated over the stove. Again, if any food seems to be unusually tough, more time should be allowed. It should stay fully an hour longer than the allotted time.

Another most important point to be remembered is that the contents of the pots must be boiling before being placed in the cooker.

Part of the Treatment.

After being treated by a specialist for a month the stout personage anxious to reduce his bulk received his bill. He gasped, hastened to the doctor and arrived in great perspiration.

"Doctor, doctor!" he exclaimed breathlessly, "this bill is as big as I am. I haven't lost an ounce."

"Tut, tut," replied the specialist affably; "the bill is part of the treatment. I see it has made you perspire."

FARMERS SHOULD ELECT THEIR OWN MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Paper Read at Rural Community Life Movement Institute Meeting by Rev. P. J. Galvin, of Downeyville—Says Farmers' Interests are Neglected.

In a paper on "the establishment of a friendly relation between town and country," by Rev. P. J. Galvin, of Downeyville, Ontario, before the Rural Community Life Movement Institute meeting at Whitby recently he said in part: "There is abroad in the modern towns and cities a spirit that is detrimental to the best interests of the country. The work of the country dweller is despised by many. To-day it is true, many in towns and cities are volunteering for work in the country, but a goodly number of the volunteers come to the country with that spirit of condescension that a consciousness of superiority imparts. On what that consciousness is based, it is difficult to see; for if comparisons are instituted it will be admitted that a vast majority of workers in the town and cities do not enjoy one-half the liberty, the independence, the health, the wholesome mode of life that is the lot of the country worker. Nevertheless, it is quite the fashion in the towns and cities to speak disparagingly of country life and country work.

Rural Damage on Trent Canal.

"Furthermore there is a tendency on the part of the towns and cities to monopolize the good things of life. In this they are aided to a great extent by the government of the country. A few days ago you all read, no doubt, of the opening of the Trent Valley Canal from Lake Ontario to Lake Simcoe. We are told that cities and towns along its route, from Trenton to Orillia, would benefit greatly by its opening. The country, generally, it is true, will profit by the completion of this great undertaking, but the greatest beneficiaries will be the towns through which the canal runs. In the construction of the dams along this waterway a large acreage has been submerged. The government has reimbursed a certain number for the loss sustained, but it has not by any means made good all the damage and inconvenience that has been caused. I know one township in the County of Peterborough that as a consequence of the building of the canal has been handicapped by two floating bridges, one three-quarters of a mile in length, and the other a mile and a quarter long. There was a time when the water around this township could be bridged by a 12-foot plank, at certain periods of the year, but now, owing to the dams of the canal, a lake of considerable size has been created.

"The Government has never seen fit to build bridges that promised any degree of permanence. The county gives a present of a few planks every year, pulls the bridges together when they are torn apart by storms and maintains on one the sign that people cross it at their own risk. But even this solicitude is not manifested by the government that is responsible for the creation of an island township. If an urban municipality were thus handicapped the government would not need much urging to induce it to relieve the grievance. But governments don't seem to have developed as yet any deep concern for the welfare of rural communities.

Reform or Migration.

"The time is coming, however, when the voice of the country will be heard. Then there will be put into operation a more equitable system of taxation and an equalizing of the burdens of the State. It is true that many of the country municipalities would to-day be enjoying more comforts if they had chosen to burden themselves with a mortgage that future generations would have to pay. They deserve at this crisis in world affairs, the gratitude of the rest of the nation.

"It is not in the interest of any nation that the residents of the country districts should be dissatisfied; because there is at hand too ready a means of ending the dissatisfaction—namely migration to the city. When that remedy is resorted to, there develops the sad condition depicted by Goldsmith in his Deserted Village.

We should give special encouragement to workers on the farm. They are called upon to make more sacrifices than their fellow-workers of the towns, and I assure you it requires no ordinary patience and perseverance and strength of character to make a farmer contented with his lot as he sits in a wagon behind a slow team hauling produce to market, while some city dweller or probably his own clergyman whisks by him in an automobile.

Booms Farmers' Party.

"There's a good time coming on the farm," your reverend secretary has said. Let us hope that his prophecy may come true. In order to usher in that time let us aid the farmers to help themselves. A new spirit is breathing in rural communities; new hopes have awakened; abandoned projects have been revived. Their voices have already been heard, and in a short time their influence will be felt in no uncertain way. They have not been allowed the privilege of making known their views in Parliament, but they will soon have the right of doing so. Let us hope that the Farmers' Party may before long be an actuality at Ottawa. Not till then can we expect the farmers' interests to be safeguarded or their views properly presented. Hitherto they have been both misrepresented. Worse still, their interests have been sacrificed for the sake of party politics, and farmers themselves have often been dupes of wily politicians. The fear of endangering the success of one's party is played upon with success and as you know, such fear is often a padlock to many a man's lips and a powerful motive with many a man's lips of their fathers. But a change is coming. A change is likewise desirable in the plan of representation, so that farmers could elect their own members. The system now in vogue is antiquated because they are limited to the choice offered them by the highly organized interests of the cities." — Toronto Star Weekly.

Canada's Military and Naval Efforts Compiled by Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P.

Total Number of Enlistments to the End of June of this Year Exceeds Half a Million Men—The Growth of the Canadian Army.

From official information I have compiled the following table which will give at a glance the facts of Canada's military and naval effort in the war to June 30, 1918:

The total number of enlistments in the C.E.F., (including conscription), to June 30, 1918, 552,601 (of these a certain number became unfit.)

Number actually gone overseas to that date 383,623—on the sea 5,900—in Canada 61,143.

Total casualties, 159,034, being composed of 43,308 dead; prisoners 2,774; returned to the front, 40,000; returned to Canada, unfit, and so forth, 50,000.

Before the war Canada had a permanent force of 3,000, and of militia 60,000.

By 1916, the Canadian Army Corps at the front had reached its full development of four divisions. There is also a Canadian Cavalry Brigade, but it is not serving with Canadian troops

Troops in Canada are under the control of the Minister of Militia at Ottawa. Troops overseas are in control of the Canadian Minister of Militia, London.

Each division comprises 19,000 men. There are also 11,000 artillery men belonging to the Canadian corps in France; the cavalry brigade referred to numbers 3,000, to whom have been added 725 Northwest Mounted Police. Total fighting troops proper, 90,000 men.

Woodsmen, railway men, salvage men, etc., (many of them often under fire), 35,000.

Total number of Canadians actually in France, 150,000.

Also railway and hospital units in Palestine and Macedonia.

There is also a new Canadian Tank Battalion.

12,000 Canadian troops are kept for home duty in Canada and for service in guarding St. Lucia (West Indies.)

Up to the 30th of June conscription provided 56,000 men.

In addition to all of the above there are many Canadians in the Royal Air Force.

Canada has despatched many thousand Serbians, Poles, etc., for service in their own countries.

Many men have also been furnished by Canada for service in inland waterways and docks in England.

Several hundred young Canadians chiefly from the universities, have been given commissions in the Imperial (British) army.

Canada has also furnished hundreds of doctors, nurses and motor car drivers for the British army (in addition to those serving in the Canadian corps.)

Two hundred Canadian officers have been lent to the United States for training purposes.

The Canadian Naval force has furnished officers and men for Imperial and Canadian service.

Battle Stories From Western Front

(SONS O' DOGS)

(By "Z.")

"Auch, aye," murmured this wounded Scot, "Ah come frae Glesca. An awfu' lot o' oor crush cam' frae there, but we were a mixed crush for a' that. There was chaps frae every bit o' Scotland ye can imagine—ye'd never think there was sae mony weys o' speakin' Scots as ye'd hear in this one battalion. Tae an English sodger were were a' jist Scots, but tae a Scot we were a' different — ye'd hear a chap frae the lang North wi' his singsang wey o' speakin' chewin' the rag wi' a chap frae Galashiels an' it would be laughable.

"Ye'd never get such a mixed lot except frae a big toon, an' Ah'm thinkin' they'd a' enlisted roun' aboot Glesca. But though it's no blate tae talk o' your ain lot, Ah must say that they could fecht like hell wi' the lid off.

"We had a couple o' brothers in my platoon an' ye never saw such a pair o' devils. They were by wey o' bein' Camerons an' they were aye bletherin' aboot the Chlannan Conn—Ah'm no sure o' the wey tae spell it, but it means 'Sons o' Dogs,' anyhow, an' it's the slogan o' th' Camerons.

"They were aye quarrelin' wi' each other an' they aye chewed the rag in Gaelic, but let a man say a word against either o' them an' he'd hae the pair on his top. One o' them got the Military Medal at the Somme for him but tae win a stripe and the V.C.

"What he did get was a foreign medal, a yella thing, bonny enough, an' he got it for a raid before the Cambraie show. He got his stripe, too, an' when the Cambrai show cam' on he got a wee bit rose tae put on his ribbon tae show he'd won the D.C.M. twice. This put him ahead o' Hector, an' there was some argy-bargying before they could get the point settled. As the Scots will, Hector cried doon the foreign medal, though he'd ha' been prood enough o' it if he wore it himsel'.

"By this time the whole Battalion was watchin' the game wi' absorbed interest, an' even the Colonel — as fine a Scots gentleman as ever sat astride a horse—used tae laugh aboot the pair o' them. They were thrawn devils, thae Camerons, an' they used tae spend maist o' their time in chewin' the rag. But for a' that they were inseparable an' they'd raither argie in each other's company than live apart.

"Auch, well. This is runnin' intae a grey lang story, an' Ah maun cut th' thing short. The Battalion was up in the line when this German shovin'-match started on the 21st o' March. Short an' a' as the time is since then, the story is auld history by noo. Ye may ca' tae mind hoo the dirty dogs o' Germans opened the battle wi' a hellofa dollop o' gas — Cheesoh, but we were in oor masks for hours on end that mornin'.

"We never got a sicht o' a fight on the first day, but at the end o' it we found we were damned near cut off. As a matter o' fact, we had to cut our wey oot before we could get tae the line we were retirin' for. It was cut an' thrust for a solid half-hour before we got back, though only our company had tae face the difficulty—Ah'm sayin' that there would be some bulidy bay'nets before the line was gained.

"The next mornin' we had tae face up tae some heavy attackin' by the enemy, but we killed the dogs by the hundred before we had tae retire. After that I canna mind the course of events. A' Ah can remember is that we spent a week in the heaviest fightin' Ah ever saw. Whiles we had tae mak' a counter-attack an' that was a touch more satisfyin', but they were ower strong for us—where they a' cam' frae is past ma comprehension—an' after a week o' fightin' we were taken oot for a rest.

The Slogan.

"The battalion wasnae sae badly smashed as one would hae imagined after the fightin' we did, but for a' that we'd lost some men. Thae Cameron devils were baith hale an' hearty but neither was ahead o' the other in point o' distinction as far as this fightin' went. They had fought weel, but then so had every man in the battalion, an' things went ower quick for any medal stunts tae be noticed.

"The battalion was supposed tae ha'e three days' rest, but as a matter o' fact we were asked tae make a counter-attack after we'd been restin' thirty-six hours. It was a bit tae the north o' where we'd been, an' we'd a lang enough march before we got to the jumpin'-off trench. We had some artillery preparation that mornin' before we went ower the top.

"First o' the Cameron brithers tae get ower was Hector, wha if ye mind was waitin' tae score off Eionn. Hector got richt intae a bunch o' Gerries that put up a stubborn fecht—he engaged aboot six o' them wi' the bayonet. Ah had only time tae ha'e a blink oot o' the corner o' my eye, but Ah saw his bayonet go like the piston o' an engine an' do sorry work on the Germans. There was a machine-gun emplacement that was doin' us a lot o' harm an' Hector noticed it. It was just behind the tack. He picked up some bombs that had fallen by the side o' a wounded bomber an' he went forward tae bomb the dogs oot.

"Now, if Hector had done this job the chances are that he'd ha'e won above his brither, but as luck would have it, Eionn got hit just as he was engagin' some o' the more stubborn Huns. It crippled him an' took a' the fight oot o' him—the maist he could dae was tae defend himsel'. Hector passed and Eionn saw him, an' wi' that he lifted up his voice and gave the rallyin' cry o' the Camerons:

"'Sons o' dogs! Sons o' dogs!' he yelled, 'come here an' get meat!'

"Hector shoved the bag o' bombs intae ma hand an' jist pointed tae the machine guns. He lat oot a yell that wad hae quickened the dead, an' wi' that he was by the side o' his brother. They tell me that he stood ower his brother an' did for eight Huns, but Ah was ower busy tae notice. Ooh, aye, Ah silenced the guns, but that has nothing to dae wi' the story."

Pot-Hunting.

"Naebody holds as little wi' pot-huntin' as Ah dae, but there was an amusin' quality aboot thae two Camerons, an' Ah was like the lave o' the chaps in the wey Ah kept watchin' the pair o' them for ma ain amusin'.

"It was at the end o' the Arras affair when Hector won his D.C.M., an' wi' that his stripe. The Germans counter-attacked by Fampoux there an' the lad held up their rush wi' a Lewis gun or sae. "PLUMS" FOR THE GOVERNMENT.

A Peterboro man says there are enough blueberries and blackberries going to waste between Schwawanigan and Sudbury, to feed all Canada, and thinks that the government or some other organization should send help to pick them. The government is rather too busy now to pick berries and the politicians don't care for them anyway. Their taste runs to "plums."—Port Hope Guide.

PROFESSOR BOHN DELIGHTS A LARGE CHAUTAUQUA AUDIENCE

Gifted Speaker Lectured on Federal Laws, Past Present and Future—The Junior Chautauqua is Meeting With Success.

Professor Bohn, who spoke last night at the Chautauqua of the future federal laws, continuing his lecture of Saturday evening, when he dealt with past and present Federal laws, held a vast audience spellbound for two hours with his eloquence and insight into Federal and International laws. On Sunday evening there was no admission fee, but a collection amounting to $147 was taken up for Belgian relief. The music supplied by members of the Chautauqua was superb, and those who turned out for the occasion were well repaid.

Junior Chautauqua.

The Junior Chautauqua, while the attendance is not large, is proving to be a great education to the parents of the city as to the value of supervised playgrounds. Miss Johnston, the instructress, spares no pains in teaching the children organized play and with the voluntary assistance of Miss Margaret MacDonald, Miss Davidson and Mrs. Clayton, is laying the foundation for a great ambition amongst the children for an established playground in the city.

BIGAMOUS BRIDES OF SOLDIER BOYS ROUNDED UP BY U.S.

Secret Service Finds Thousands of Cases Where Girls Wed for Allowance.

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Because soldiers are susceptible and chivalrous, the Government of the United States is being robbed of thousands of dollars every month by unscrupulous women. Soldiers in Uncle Sam's uniform who believe they are depriving themselves of part of their small wage to support a newly acquired wife are merely contributing to adventuresses who are deriving the same source of revenue from several soldier husbands. While the soldier is "carrying on" at the front with the picture of his newly acquired bride close over his heart, the bride is "carrying on" at home as the result of receiving as many allotments as her charms may have enabled her to assemble soldier husbands.

In an effort to stamp out this new vampire of war times the Government of the United States is starting a nationwide search for the culprits and is meeting with considerable success. Every agency of the Government is being brought to bear to ferret out the offenders.

The work of ferreting out fraud against the Government in this and other respects is in charge of L. Merriwether Smith, of Harrisburg, Ky., formerly a member of the Kentucky State Senate and now associate counsel for the War Risk Bureau. More than one hundred cases already are prepared for trial, and many women are facing prison sentences as a result of their activities. These cases are but the beginning of the prosecutions, which are expected to mount into the thousands. The Bureau of Investigations of the War Risk Bureau has worked out a unique system by which soldiers' allotments are checked up.

Most of the victims to this form of "vampiring," it appears, according to the, War Risk Bureau, are young boys from the country who reach the various camps with chivalrous ideas of women. These boys are attracted by the dashing "camp widows," fall victim to the appearance of style, and end by marrying them and making an allotment of part of their soldier's pay as required by law. A private is expected, when married, to make an allotment of $15 to his wife, and the Government matches this allotment with an allowance of $15 more, so the wife receives $30 and the soldier goes to the war front with a wage of $15 a month. In some cases women who have participated in this form of defrauding both soldiers and Government have been drawing allotments and allowances from twelve different alleged husbands. Each allowance calls for the assumption of a different name and the check has to be endorsed, subjecting the perpetrator to the charge of forgery and also that of bigamy. In order to obtain these allowances the women run the risk of having the twelve husbands, more or less, meet each other in the trenches "somewhere in France," where a comparison of notes and of photographs of the wives left behind might cause embarrassing complications.

The checks sent out by the Treasury Department are mailed in an envelope which renders the address and allowance number visible from the outside, so the mail carrier, post office employees and others may become aware of the person receiving them. In cases where suspicion is awakened the authorities are notified.

Singularly enough, the Pacific Coast produces more of these cases than does the Atlantic. Mr. Smith, who has charge of the investigations, explains this on the ground that the women of the Pacific Coast, especially of San Francisco, have had more experience in this form of fraud than the women of the East.

"These cases were especially prevalent during the time when soldiers were being sent to the Philippines," said Mr. Smith, discussing the cases.

While the great majority of fraud cases involve women who have deluded trusting young soldiers, there are also many cases of soldiers who have themselves been party to fraud. In these instances they have alleged the existence of wives who were not their wives, and have made claims for allowances for children that did not exist. Under the law, an illegitimate child is entitled to allowaance for support, and the Government has cognizance of cases where soldiers have made claims to the parentage of illegitimate children who did not really exist.

The Government has record of one case where a soldier claimed a man was his relative to whom he had contributed money for support. It developed the man was not related to the soldier in any way, but explained the transaction by saying the soldier had stolen $50 from him at one time and had agreed to pay it back in this manner.

Food Board Flashes

Are you keeping down your personal consumption of sugar? And, furthermore, are you getting into the habit of using brown sugar wherever possible? The reason for this is that in order to get the most efficient economic results from the refining of sugar about 30 per cent. of yellow sugar has to be produced along with the white.

The British sugar ration is 2 pounds a month. In France it is about 1 pound a month and in Italy 10 ounces. In view of this, it should surely be an easy matter for Canadians to keep strictly to what is asked of them.

KENNEDY GAINS FIFTEEN POUNDS

Wouldn't Give Tanlac for All the Other Medicines on Earth, He Says.

"I tell you what I wouldn't take Tanlac for all the other medicines in the world, for it not only relieved my stomach trouble entirely, but I have gained fifteen pounds besides," said S. L. Kennedy, of 524 Dundas street, Toronto, the other day. Mr. Kennedy is a returned veteran, who spent 29 months in France as a member of the 75th Battalion, nearly half the time serving in the front line trenches.

"Ever since I came back from France," he continued, "my system has been very much run down, and I suffered constantly from stomach trouble and indigestion. My appetite failed and I could not relish a thing I would eat. The little I forced down soured on my stomach and filled me up with gas that pressed so on my heart that I could hardly breathe. If I tried to draw a long breath my side would hurt just like a knife sticking in me. Meats, pastry and other rich foods would simply tear me all to pieces. I had to live on the lightest kind of diet and even that would upset me. After every meal I would have a heavy, dull feeling, followed by an awful pain right in the pit of my stomach, and I would belch up gas, and pieces of undigested food. I lost over twenty pounds and was simply miserable all the time.

"An uncle of mine who has taken Tanlac with fine results induced me to try it, and I sure am glad I took his advice. I have taken three bottles so far and I have a fine appetite now, I can eat any thing that I want; I never have a bit of trouble with gas or indigestion, and that awful pain in my stomach is gone too. I am picking up right along now, gaining in weight and strength every day; and it certainly is a pleasure to be able to sit down and enjoy a good square meal once more without having to suffer for it afterwards. Tanlac is undoubtedly the best medicine I have ever taken, and I am simply delighted at the way it has fixed me up."

Tanlac is sold in Peterboro by the W. B. Warne Drug Co., Ltd.; in Havelock, by A. C. Denike; in Lakefield by Tanner Drug Co., Ltd.; in Fowler's Corners, by W. A. Hunter; in Gelert, by A. J. Scott; in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

For not giving the right of way at the corner of Charlotte and George St., Mr. B. W. Manning, of the Manning Garage, added $8.10 to the city coffers.

PRIVATE HARRY JONES WOUNDED ON AUG. 9TH

Private Harry Jones, who enlisted here with the 247th Battalion, was admitted to the Australian Hospital, Abbeville, France, on Friday, August 9th, with a gunshot wound in his side This information was contained in a telegram received this morning by Mrs. Jones, Albert street. From this and other casualties recently reported, the men who went overseas with the 247th have been in the fighting in front of Amiens.

The Alexandrian Library.

There were two great libraries in Alexandria, the one in Bruchium and that in the Serapeum, the former contained 400,000 and the latter 700,000 volumes or rolls. The Bruchium library was accidentally destroyed by Julius Caesar when he ordered the shipping fired in the harbor B.C. 46. The Serapeum library was destroyed by an edict of Theodosius, 391 A.D. The claim that the Caliph Amrou, A.D. 640, ordered the destruction of all the books in the Alexandria libraries, with the statement that "if they agreed with the Koran they were useless and that if they disagreed with it they were pernicious," is received by many high authorities with suspicion.

How To Get $10,000.

Young people seldom love money for its own sake. They are usually so eager to spend it for the pleasures it will bring that they need to be urged to save a part of it. Boys and girls should be taught early to save money for the future. Not so many men and women would miss marriage and parentage and the joys of a home of their own if boys and girls were taught that $3.30 a week saved will in thirty years at savings bank interest become something more than $10,000 — a handy sum to educate your boys and girls if you begin in the teens to save so much by giving up things which are useless if not also harmful.

The Mathematical Problem.

Little Marion was busy at her "home work." After a great many perplexed frowns and much nibbling at her pencil she looked up and said:

"The only answer I can get to this example is 'five and three-fourths horses.' Do you s'pose that is right, mamma?"

"Well, I don't know," answered her mother cautiously. "It sounds rather queer."

A long pause; then the small arithmetician's face lit up with a smile.

"Oh, I know," she cried; "I'll reduce the three-fourths horses to colts!"

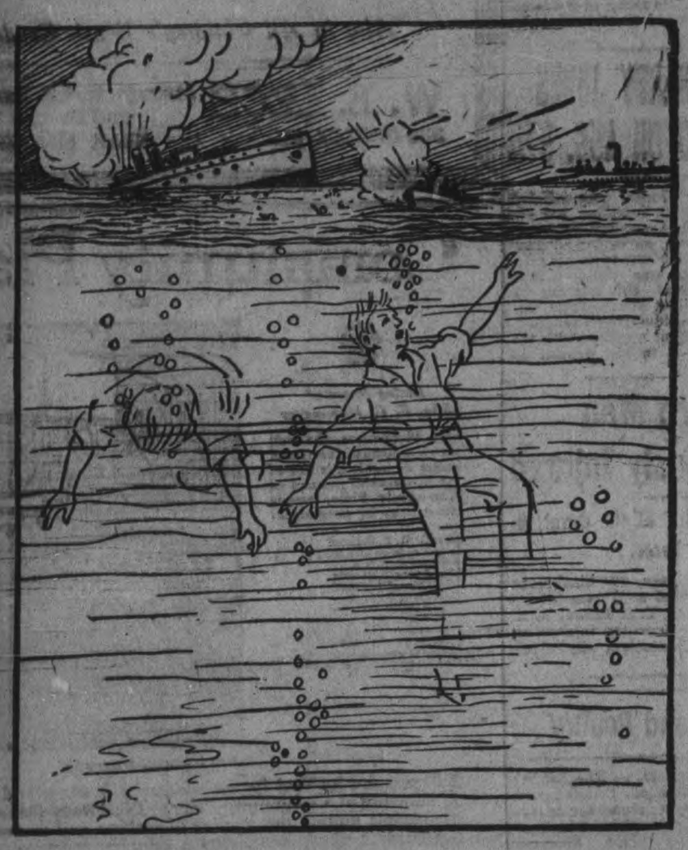
REMEMBER BY GIVING



AT any other time than this, the heroism of the men of the Merchant Marine would fill the newspapers. As it is, you simply read of so many tons of shipping sunk by submarines.

Yet from the few words you read, you must picture scores of scenes like the illustration. 15,000 men of this service, not officially recognized by the governments, have suffered death in order that soldiers, munitions and food may cross the ocean. Remember their widows and orphans, dependent for life itself on your generosity.

Let Your Donation Be An Appreciation of This Sacrifice!

As each day sees new victims of the U-Boat, more and more mouths wait to be fed—widows and orphans, who cannot look to governments for relief.

"They shall not want!" Say this in the only way that counts—by your contribution.

WE MUST listen to the call that comes from the deep—"Remember the Lusitania! Remember Captain Fryatt! Remember the 176 vessels lost, together with all trace of crew and cargo! Remember the 15,000 men of the Merchant Marine, who have already made the supreme sacrifice! Remember the widows and orphans!"

Interesting Letter From a Peterboro Soldier Overseas

Pte. Harold White Writes From "Somewhere in France—Likes to Get the Examiner.

Mrs. Peter Simons, 311 Rubidge street, has received a very interesting letter from her grandson, Pte. Harold White, who has been with the Canadians in France for over two years. He formerly resided in Peterborough.

Somewhere in France, July 17.

Dear Grandma,—I received all letters from home, and I am glad to hear you are well. I also received the bunch of Examiners, that good old home paper. That is such a comfort to us. I get the news of "home sweet home."

We had a big day here. It was field day and it sure was a grand success. There were eleven thousand soldiers on the field besides many nurses and doctors. We had baseball, football, lacrosse, brigade sports, battalion sports, divisional sports and corps sports. Our brigade won the tug-of-war, and races of all kinds, 100 yards, 5 miles across country, obstacle races, boxing, wrestling, broad and high jump, and a midway show run by the Y.M.C.A., with a circus parade. Believe me, grandma, it was some parade. However, the best turnout got first prize. One of the units in the 3rd division won the championship in baseball. Gee how we did cheer. It was one grand day. The American soldiers are a swell lot of men and well liked. We are in a big village, but I am sorry to say it is all in ruins. We are in a swell old Chateau. It has large promenade walks and running streams, and in the grounds stands a shrine of the Virgin. It stands six feet high and is all decorated. Many people come there to pray. I, too, love to go there when I can, for after all, there is nothing like prayer.

I am seeing now what I'll never see in my life again. (If I can only hang on to my life.)

You should hear the "Princes Pat Musical Comedy Co." It is some show. The fellows dress and make up as girls, some class to the girls, good singers, dancers and piano players. They put on a good show.

I saw Father Cote. He looks well. I was glad to see him. He is doing good work here among the boys. I am on the watch for Father Kelly.

Love to all.

HAROLD.

SALVATION ARMY NOT USING PUGILISTS

The Salvation Army is in no way associated with proposals to utilize the efforts of Jess Willard or other fistic fighters of lesser repute in staging boxing bouts for the benefit of the Army's war work and reports to the contrary are utterly untrue according to Commissioner Richards who is in charge of the Salvation Army throughout Eastern Canada. The Commissioner has as his authority for his denial a message received from Commissioner Estell commanding the Salvation Army in Chicago, from which centre emanated a recent report to the effect that the Army there was interested in the boxing bouts vetoed by the Chicago police.

FIRED OVER WHITE FLAG.

Despicable German Treachery In East Africa Exposed by Admiralty.

A story of German white flag treachery in East Africa in the early days of the war is issued by the British Admiralty.

In order to prevent the German merchant ships lying in the harbor of Dar-es-Salaam from coming out and acting as tenders to the raider Konigsberg two, of his Majesty's ships were despatched to that harbor. The German Governor had agreed that the German merchant ships must be regarded as British prizes and he was now informed that their engines must be disabled. An hour later the Germans hoisted a couple of white flags on the flagstaff at the harbor entrance, whereupon working parties in boats were sent from the warships to inspect and, if necessary dismantle the engines.

No sign was made from the shore until the boats were well within range, when a treacherous fire was opened on them, the German white flag still flying. The senior naval officer, who was in one of the boats has reported his experience as follows:

"I had just given orders to go ahead, when we were suddenly assailed by rifle fire from both banks a considerable volume coming from the close vicinity of the flagstaff whence still flew three white flags. Steering was difficult, speed slackened, and it was found that the stoker forward was lying in the fore peak dangerously wounded.

"Bullets were raining over and into the boat, and through and against the thin iron plates rigged on either side the boiler, and round the coxswain in the stern sheets but Lieut. Corson, with great pluck, ran forward and kept the fires going. Very soon after a seaman was hit in the head and collapsed, and then the coxswain, with blood running from his mouth, was shot in the leg. His conduct was splendid. He never flinched, but stuck to his post, saying: 'That's nothing, sir; I'm all right. We shall soon be out of the channel.' It was very largely due to the coolness and pluck of this leading seaman that the boat safely emerged from the danger zone."

Penelope Pairs.

Pert Penelope Perkins, patently plucking pretty primroses, perceiving Percival Patmore, pretended preoccupation. Percy perspired profusely, penning pensive poetry. Presently, properly primed, Percival promptly proposed. Penelope, prudently pessimistic, playfully procrastinated. Percival, passionately protesting, produced precious presents, promising pathetically, perpetual protection. Purse-proud, pompous papa, proving pliant, Penelope placidly paired.

TERRORISM AS IT EXISTS IN RUSSIA

Englishwoman's Description of the Rule of the Red Guards.

The sufferings of an Englishwoman in Russia living off the beaten track, who has been an object of special persecution because she is English and because she owned property, is told in a letter sent by her to a friend in England and published in The London World:

"I cannot hold out much longer," she wrote. "The Bolsheviks are like a pack of hounds in full cry, attacking me because I am English. They say America, England, and Japan are the only countries where their theories find little or no appreciation, so they do not consider their subjects as Allies but enemies, and, at the best, international material for their ultra-radical demonstrations. They took my horses from me as well as my harness and sleighs. A village cobbler is General Inspector, a village blacksmith is Governor, another Vice Governor, and so on. Ten commissars, one madder than the other, wished to turn me out of my house. The other day the Commissar of Public Instruction and Graphic Arts told me that my house had been handed over to him, that nothing would belong to me any more, but that I would be allowed a room as a caretaker if I intended to work properly. The day before another commissar ordered me to lodge thirty-six people in eight rooms, threatening to send the Red Guard if I did not set to work immediately. He told me I could not dream of retaining even my bedroom, but might have a 'bed and corner' in one of my rooms. As companions I was to have the Red Guardsmen, who had robbed me on the previous night.

"To-day a commission came to see which of my pictures and family portraits they would like to kidnap for a 'museum'—a mere pretext to do away with the most valuable things. Every hour brings fresh tortures and fresh insults. They wanted to put me in prison, to blackmail me. They are destroying all I lived for and no money can replace. They even broke into the vault where my dear old English governess is buried, and hence I now hope to steal her body to-morrow night and bury her in the Catholic Cemetery in town to avoid further insult.

"They cut down the trees round the house, starved the dogs, and drove away the servants. Nothing can give any idea of what is going on here. They threaten to capture people and make their friends and parents pay ransom. We are back to the days of mediaeval highwaymen, only coarser, more brutal, and vulgar. We are quite at sea as to what is going on in the rest of the world. The newspapers are destroyed on arrival, and the Bolsheviki publish their own news, brimming over with lies. The town is terrorized. I do not think they are over 300, but they have a Red Guard in their pay, headed by ex-convicts. We are 70,000 people, yet we allow ourselves to be ridden over roughshod. The Bolsheviki are now claiming 10,000,000 rubles from the town people. They are socializing the houses and want to expropriate the owners, take the furniture, and divide the clothes.

"They have annexed the mills I built myself, and I am now reduced to sell clothes to provide food for myself and my few remaining servants. New claims are daily invented for money fines and taxes such as have never been dreamed of in any country. I have been warned several times that they want to arrest me, and even shoot me, as this is the only way to get rid of the 'accursed English.' Up to the present I have only managed to keep my head above water because they are all fighting each other and wanting the same things and the same places. Letters from home take three months to reach me here. If help does not come soon it will be too late."

H-TOPPED SHOES BARRED NEXT YEAR

IR COATS TO BE SHORTER ND DOUBLE BREASTED EF-ECTS WILL BE TABOO IN 1919.

shington, Aug. 17. — The War stries Board has assumed the role bitr of fashions in making pub-gulations which shoemakers and ufacturers of men's clothing are cted to follow in planning for the ings for next Spring. The rules tablished to conserve leather the materials which go into e.

Overgaiters are restricted to the eight and a half inch level.

Shoe manufacturers for the next six months also are forbidden to purchase or use new style lasts, and all shoes are to be restricted to four colours, black, white and two shades of brown. Leather linings are discouraged.

Men's clothing after the present stock is depleted, will be conservative in design and limited as to length of coat. Not more than ten models of sack suits are to be put out by the manufacturers, who are now planning for next Spring's stocks. Men's coats will have fewer pockets, the government possibly feeling that they will [illegible] as many by 1919. Here [illegible] the regulations as approved by the War Industries Board, after consultation with the trade.

Sack Coats—It is proposed to eliminate inside patch or bellows pockets of cloth. Only one vent to be allowed in skirt of a coat, that to be in the centre. Length to be 30 inches, based on a size 36 regular, ¾ inch grade to size, 1½ inches to be added for longs.

Only three outside pockets to be permitted on any sack coat. Facings not to exceed 4½ inches in width, finished at the breast.

Waistcoats.—Facings not to exceed 1 3-4 inches in width, finished. The amount of woollen cloth used in the front of waistcoats to be reduced, increasing the amount of lining fabric used.

Trousers.—Side and back straps and flaps to be eliminated. Outlet on inseams of leg not to exceed three-quarters of an inch. No reinforcement of trousers to be made with wool cloth.

Lightweight Overcoats—All double-breasted coats to be eliminated. Chesterfield models only to be made. Such coats not to exceed 43 inches in length based on a size 36 regular 1¼ inch grade to size, 2 inches to be added for longs.

Raincoats—Maximum length to be 48 inches. Maximum width of collar to be 3½ inches.

Reference samples not to exceed six square inches of cloth.

All double coats with detachable linings for civilians' use to be eliminated.

On the subject of shoes, the War Industries Board says:

"In order to husband our resources, and assist in carrying on the war programme further measures of conservation are absolutely necessary in the shoe trade for the Spring season of 1919.

"The purpose of this programme is to reduce still further if possible the number of styles and to avoid those styles that involve the unnecessary use of material and capital.

"These recommendations apply to all samples made for the Spring season of 1919, and to all shoes cut for manufacture on or after Oct. 1, 1918."

The statement then sets forth the maximum height of various styles of shoes and adds:

"You are requested, in so far as possible or wherever practicable to institute the following methods of conservation:

"1. To use economical cutting patterns.

"2. To co-operate with retailers and wholesalers to restrict the return of merchandise.

"3. To reduce the number of new boot samples for women to be made for Spring season of 1919.

"4. To discourage the purchase or order of unnecessary sample pairs of shoes for future buying.

"5. To encourage the sale of low cut and low effects."

THE WORLD OF SPORT

SPORTING COMMENT

There was a middle course for the baseball magnates to steer in closing the present playing season. It was one of three courses. The pennant season could have been terminated the middle or 20th of August as advocated by Ban Johnson, and the world's series played before September 1, the day to which exemption from the work or fight order was extended by Secretary Baker; it could have been manitained until September 2, and terminated then without any world's series, or it could have been maintained until September 1—September 2 the magnates made it in order to get in a holiday—and the world's series played right after that. It was the last named course which wdoptaed. The middle course woulad would have been second of the three named, playing by both leagues as per original schedule until September 1, with no world's series.

Playing until only August 20 was out of the question if the greatest good was to be extended to the greatest number. The only equitable course, fair to all sixteen clubs and fair to fans, players, and club owners was to keep the original schedules going as long as possible, which in this instance was September 1. It would not have been fair to all the clubs or a logical procedure to adopt the scheme of closing August 20 in order to get in a world's series. Better to forego the series than to do that. It would have been poor substitute of a course. It would have been right enough for the clubs that would benefit from a world's series, but not for all and it would have been taking away from the fans of several cities—the public—a privilege to which they are clearly entitled, that of attending games until it was necessary to close the pennant season. To have lopped off part of the regular season in order to get in the post season series would have given altogether too much importance to the latter and created a situation entirely and ridiculously out of proportion. The main thing in a baseball season is its pennant races. The world's series is but a side issue an added feature, and it is small wonder that that part of the Johnson suggestion was turned down.

The Johnson idea, however, had its point of appeal, the same being to close by September 1. Those who opposed this, that is those favoring a world's series right after September 1, doubtless believed the War Department would have no objections to the latter course. Such men as Clark Griffith and Charles Comiskey are too loyal—they have shown a deal of practical patriotism in their considerable material contributions to the soldiers overseas—and are hardly the men to advocate anything of which they thought the government would disapprove. August Herrmann declares positively that organized baseball is not defying Secretary Baker in this matter. Yet others, devoted to baseball, too, hold with Johnson that playing subject to the work or fight order, should not be at tempted.

No magnate can be blamed for not agreeing to the proposition of closing the middle of August to permit of a world's series, a proposition which, like the defiance of the National Commission finding in the Perry case, showed anything but "able leadership," but going beyond September 1 is the other extreme and not the middle course, which would have been the most conservative and the least provocative of criticism. Most assuredly prospective world's series players cannot be blamed if they want assurances that the series after September 1 will be all right with the War Department.

On their way to oblivion:—The spit ball, kultur, the corkscrew.

A Detroit woman recently sued her husband for divorce because he so far forgot himself in his joy at seeing Ty Cobb crack out a hit that he slammed her in the jaw and sent her out for the complete count.

Wife, it appears, had been begging hubby for a long, long time to "take me out to the ball game; take me out to the park." Hubby finally did, but with reluctance. The combat had not progressed very far when Cobb came up in a pinch—two on and two runs needed to tie. Right away hubby got all steamed up. In loud voice, and with gesticulations that reminded many persons of a whirling Dervish, hubby implored Cobb to "kill it."

Ty doubled. And then it happened!

Hubby jumped around with joy frenzied jumps and began to swing his arms. The fist at one end of one arm somehow or other landed flush upon wife's chin. Wifie crumpled and then flopped for the count.

Soon after recovering wife hustled to a lawyer, and on the grounds that her husband had disgraced her by his enthusiastic profanity over the Cobbian clout, and humiliated her "beyond the expression of words," by being slammed for a goal right before a multitude, she sued for divorce.

Major League batsmen who made a practice of heckling the umpires for doubtful balls and strikes never found any sympathy with Fred Clarke. The ex-Pirate leader once expressed a truism which should be drilled into every boy who gets into the national pastime.

Wilbur Cooper brought out Clarke's little line following an argument in one of the games played by the Pirates last spring at Jacksonville. Several of the Pittsburg batters were complaining that the umpire "missed" some that were an inch or two from the corner of the plate.

"Well, boys," remarked Cooper, "I feel the same as Cap Clark on pitched balls. If they're close enough to be called strikes, they're good enough to hit."

NEW YORK, Aug 17.—The Giants are now nearing the end of a campaign which for the variations of form produced by it can be compared only to the one they waged in 1916 In a majority of recent seasons McGraw's teams have been steady going rather dependable outfits, but in 1916 and again this year figuring on the Giants from day to day has been very much of a joke. Finnegan of "on ag'in, on ag'in" fame, had nothing on them.

In 1916 the Giants got away to a wretched start, winning only two of their first fifteen games. Then they left the Polo grounds— which they verily believed to have been jinxed—behind them and fared forth into the west, whereupon they began to win and didn't stop until they had compiled a streak of seventeen consecutive victories, culminating in a series in Boston. Local fans were jubilant, for it looked like another big year for McGraw. But they were soon plunged into despair again as the Giants fell into a fit of mediocrity from which it took their leader a long time to rouse them. It became necessary for him to break up the team with which he had started the season, so that when September was reached he had an almost entirely new infield and had added a pitcher and a catcher to his staff.

Strengthened by the addition of Zimmerman, Herzog, Holke, Sallee and McCarty and by the sudden development of Schupp into a star of the first magnitude, the Giants thundered down the stretch, winning 26 games in a row before they were halted by the Braves in a game on the the Polo grounds. Their sensational spurt had come too late, however, and the Robins wobbled over the finish line in advance of the field and earned the championship of the league.

REVERSE TRUE THIS YEAR

This year the reverse has been true. The Giants opened the season to the accompaniment of loud hurrahs and proceeded to slug their way through their eastern rivals with the los oi only one game in the first nineteen played. The team was as yet unmarred by the ravages of war, and performed in a style which led even rival managers to brand them as the greatest combination they had even been. Then came the first western trip, and with it the first hint of the fate which lay in store for them. They had a disastrous road trip and came home with only a slender lead in the race, and they surrendered this to the Cubs soon after their return to the Polo grounds. Several times since then they have pulled up to within a few games of the Chicago team, but just as their followers have roused themselves from a state of apathy and prepared to resume their cheering McGraw's men have tumbled and slipped back into the rut.

Even after their setback in the recent series with the Cubs the Giants had an excellent chance to narrow the gap that separates them from Mitchell's men, as the Cubs found the going a bit rough in Brooklyn. However, the local team was easy prey for the Reds, and lost additional ground. The fans were about to quit in disgust a few days ago—many of them in fact, have done so—but the two victories scored by the Giants against the Braves on Saturday have infused into the more faithful bugs a new hope that their team will in some manner win out.

FLETCHER IN EVERY GAME

Arthur Fletcher is now the only member of the team who has taken part in every game played by the Giants this year. Benny Kauff and Walter Holke played in every game up to the dates of their departure from the team ,while George Burns and Zimmerman did not miss a game until last week, when Burns was called home by the tragic death of his little brother, and Zim was forced to lay off because of illness.

Fletcher has stuck to his post day in and day out in spite of frequent painful injuries, for it takes more than a split finger or a twisted ankle to keep the aggressive Giant captain out of a ball game. Early in the season he sustained an injury to the index finger of his right hand, and the cartilage in that digit has spread so that it is now impossible for him to close the hand, while frequent knocks received on the injured member cause him intense pain.

"The gamest son of a gun in baseball," John Lobert recently pronounced him, and there is none who will challenge the wisdom of the famous veteran in so characterizing the Collinsville cutup.

NO MORE HIGH WAGES IN SHIPYARD WORK.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 16.—The employment of professional ball players in shipyards "more for the purpose of bolstering up teams than to expedite the shipbuilding programme," will no longer be countenanced by the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

In an order issued by the Vice-President, Howard Coonley, ball players are placed on the same footing as all other workmen and yards that offer high salaries to obtain their services will not be reimbursed by the corporation.

Mr. Coonley declared that it was the favoured sport, but that it should be conducted on a high plane in the present emergency and the professional athlete should be treated as are all other workers.

TO work for four years with greater speed, cheaper, and with only brief and local interruptions compared to the choked transportation of neighboring countries, to be cited in those foreign countries as an example of competent long-distance operation—and then to be blocked or hampered by labor trouble! This was the anti-climax which the Canadian Railway War Board, under which all Canadian Railways are operated nowadays, strove to avoid and finally did overcome by creating, with the assistance of the Government and the labor unions, the Railway Labor Board of Canada. The accompanying photograph was taken after the meeting between railway labor leaders and the railway managers, at which the new Board was finally formed and commissioned to adjust the application in Canada of the McAdoo Scale of Wages, as well as any other controversies that may arise between the workers and their officers.

In the picture there are shown not only the senior executives of some of the most powerful labor organizations in the world, but an equal number of great railroad managers, including Sir George Bury, the expert operating Vice-President of the C. P. R., whose report on the railroads of Russia brought him knighthood. The picture was taken in the Canadian Railway War Board offices after this group had formed the Railway Labor Board of Canada, which will handle in future all railway labor troubles and will adjust the McAdoo scale of wages to Canada's 147,000 railway employees.

KAWARTHA PARK COTTAGERS HELD ANNUAL MEETING

Officers for the Ensuing Year Were Elected—Will Build a Pavilion.

A splendid representation of the cottagers of Kawartha Park attended the annual meeting of the Kawartha Park Association on Saturday evening when officers for 1919 were elected. President J .W. Williamson, Toronto; Vice-President, Reverend J. Edminson; Secretary-Treasurer, Dr. M. A. Morrison.

Will Build Pavilion.

After general business had been finished some improvements were talked over for the park. A piano has already been purchased by the association and a pavilion is contemplated for the future. This it was felt will fill a long felt want as a church and place of entertainment.

The meeting was held at Dr. Morrison's cottage, the former president Mr. R. B. Rogers was in the chair.

DE LAVAL DEFEATED MATTHEWS-BLACKWELL

De Laval 7, Matthews-Blackwell 6.

The De Laval were on the big end of the score Saturday afternoon when they clashed with the Matthews-Blackwell team. The Matthews-Blackwell team garnered six runs, only one run behind the south end crowd. Very few fans turned out, although the weather was ideal. Jake Solomn was an efficient umpire.

BALL PLAYERS' AGES OFTEN ARE VERY HARD TO JUDGE

Ball players' ages are very often hard to judge. When a man has been before the public for eight or ten years the fans are prone to regard him as a real old timer, yet they err frequently in their estimate of an athlete's age. When the recent decision on the work or fight order was issued by Secretary of War Baker many fans were of the opinion that Larry Doyle was over the age and would be spared to the Giants yet Larry bobbed up with a registration card which showed that he is class 4A of the draft. On top of that John McGraw wired to Otis Crandall, who has been pitching in the Pacific Coast League, to find out how he stood ,and Otis, who is a real veteran replied that he is in class 4A. And it wasn't so long ago that Bob Harmon resenting the application of the word "old" to him, produced a registration card showing that he is twenty-nine years old.

WANTS POLICE FORCE TO CATCH TOOTHLESS CAT.

St. Thomas, August 17.—A well-known local man visited the police station and complained to the chief that he had an old pet cat which he wanted destroyed. The animal, he claimed, was so old that it has lost its teeth, and it is so wild that he cannot catch it himself. He has, therefore, appealed to the police to help him.

Tie thes in a bag and pound them just enough to break a little. Cook these in bag with the tomatoes, put through a sieve fine enough to exclude the seeds, and add when cooked down considerably vinegar to taste, perhaps from two quarts up; cook till quite thick, and bottle.

Roosevelt as a Woodchopper.

When he owned a ranch in the west Theodore Roosevelt, as he says in his autobiography, "could chop fairly well for an amateur," but he admits that he could not do one-third of the work that his men did.

"One day," he writes, "when we were cutting down the cottonwood trees to begin our building operations, I heard some one ask Dow what the total cut had been, and Dow, not realizing that I was within hearing, answered 'Well, Bill cut down fifty-three, I cut forty-nine, and the boss, he benevered down seventeen.' Those who have seen the stump of a tree that has been gnawed down by a beaver," adds Mr. Roosevelt, "will understand the exact force of the comparison."

ATE AND WAS SAD

Yet It Was a Dish For Which He Had Yearned For Years.

A TRAGEDY IN GASTRONOMY.

Bouillabaisse as Sung by Thackeray and as Served in a Famous Marseilles Resort Proved Very Different Propositions to an English Epicure.

We all know that famous poem of Thackeray's which begins,

A street there is in Paris famous
For which no rime our language yields, and goes on to tell of the tavern where the genial Titmarsh in the days when he was a Paris correspondent "ate and drank the bouillabaisse."

As a result of that delightful poem tens of thousands of Englishmen have yearned to eat bouillabaisse. Thackeray puts it so beautifully! The steaming dish of stewed fish that he conjures up in his lines—how appetizing it seems! I know that it was quite early in my teens when I first read that poem, and from that moment there was formed in my mind a firm resolve to eat some day of bouillabaisse.

My opportunity came not long ago when I visited Marseilles. It was nearly half past 9 when I sat down in the dining room of the hotel.

"There is no bouillabaisse on the menu," I said severely to the maitre d'hotel. "I have come to Marseilles specially to eat it." He replied that it was not a specialty of the house, but that it could always be prepared. How long would it take? Twenty-five minutes, perhaps a little longer. "But I think monsieur would find it rather heavy at such a late hour."

He was not encouraging, this maitre d'hotel. I did not accept for a moment his suggestion that bouillabaisse was too heavy a dish for half past 9 at night. Thackeray had not talked about heaviness. But twenty-five minutes! I ordered an omelet.

At midnight, walking down the famous Cannebiere, back to the hotel, I was hailed by a familiar voice. It was that of a friend whom I had not seen for a long time. Gratefully I grasped his hand and told him that I intended to eat bouillabaisse as soon as possible. And my respect for him was considerably enhanced when he told me that he had eaten some that very afternoon, an hour after his arrival in Marseilles. Here was the true spirit, and I related to him, with some bitterness, my experience with the maitre d'hotel. "Well, it is rather heavy stuff," he said. But I brushed this aside, and we arranged to meet at lunch on the morrow, when I should have the best that Marseilles could give me.

There are, as everybody knows, two places at Marseilles for bouillabaisse—Pascal's and Basso's, on the Vieux Port. We decided on Basso's.

"Bouillabaisse," I said incidentally, I paid no attention to what my friend ordered. No other dish interested me. But in a minute or so a curious looking mess was set down before him.

"What's that stuff you're going to eat?" I asked.

"That's bouillabaisse," he said, "but it's not mine."

I started. This bouillabaisse, this curious looking stuff, with indigestible looking lumps of fish floating in a bilious and oily saffron liquid! I know not what I had expected bouillabaisse to be, but it certainly was not this. There was a piece of fish which I recognized as eel, and I loathe eels. The head tail of another and unknown fish stuck up out of the opaque liquid. But it was the yellow liquid itself which repelled. It shouted biliousness, and the smell of saffron that arose with the steam made me feel ill. Oh, Thackeray!

I pecked at the eel—or it may have been a lamprey—explored the various other fish, tasted gingerly of the thick saffron liquid on one of the pieces of toast that floated in it. But mine was no palate for bouillabaisse. I made the waiter take the mess away and bring lamb cutlets.

But I had tasted of bouillabaisse and was not to forget it. All day long the terrible taste of saffron remained with me. Nothing would shift it; not Marseilles tea, nor many golden books, nor dinner. In fact, the bouillabaisse of lunch spoiled the dinner. And at midnight, in a cafe on the Cannebiere, my friend confided a secret to me. "When we fell in with each other just twenty-four hours ago," he said, "I was suffering just as you are now. The horrible taste of saffron had remained obstinately with me ever since lunch and has not quite gone even yet. But you told me you had come to Marseilles to eat bouillabaisse, and I knew nothing I could say would dissuade you. But no doubt the bitterness of this moment will fade away, and as time passes you will tell your friends in England how excellent is the real bouillabaisse if only you have it in Marseilles."

"Never! I would die first!" I exclaimed firmly.—London Standard.

Still Possible.

"Uncle, can't I be a pirate when I grow up?"

"Sure you can, son. What do you want to pirate—books or plays?"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

WHAT OTHER EDITORS SAY

"THE WORKING GIRL."

(Flordia Times-Union.)

"Hats off to the working girl! While our boys are assisting the French and English in driving the Hun from French soil their sisters and sweethearts and wives on this side are holding with steady nerve and alert eye the controlling lever that keeps the great American manufacturing and industrial plants humming night and day. The metamorphosis has been quick and sure."

"No Peace While Junkers Rule."

(Washington Star.)

"As long as the military leaders rule Germany there can be no negotiation, no move toward peace. It is the military evil in Germany that the Allies are now fighting. So long as the Teutonic generals dictate the policies of the Central Empires so long must Allies continue to fight. This serves notice upon the German people that so long as they submit to military leadership they must endure, the sufferings and losses and sorrows of war, for the allied world will fight until it destroys Germany's military power or until the German people themselves put an end to its dominions."

"A Reasonable Prediction."

(Louisville Courier-Journal.)

"All in all it appears to be not unreasonable to predict if the war does not end before 1919 it will end in 1919 Its ending before 1919 depends on the enemies of Germany. And the dependence on the Allies is based on their present determined efforts to mobilize a sufficient force to do the work before them. They must not relax in their efforts however favorably the tide may be running with them. America, specially, must increase rather than diminish her own efforts."

"Eastward the Star of Freedom."

(Troy Times.)

"Eastward the star of freedom takes its way. Grotesque humor once assigned to certain individuals the task of pushing the clouds along, tl may be a grotesque feat, but certainly it is true that it is the Americans who of pushing the clouds along. It may the east. Our boys have renewed the 'pep'—the offensive fighting quality —which the Allies were compelled to abandon in the face of superior numbers in the German drives, and again the same resistless energy which the British had shown before, and the French in their area, is imparted to the entire allied line."

Food Board Flashes

The North American continent can take credit unto itself for having contributed to the world its greatest crop in point of yield—the white potato. It made its bow to civilization from Peru and has since girdled the globe, winning devotees everywhere it has gone.

To-day North America produces more than half a billion bushels of potatoes, while Europe produces approximately ten times as much as this continent. The world's present potato crop is approximately large enough to fill two-thirds of the Panama Canal.

Whole tomatoes for salads may be put up in stone jars and covered with weak vinegar sweetened and spiced.

CATTLE MARKET

Union Stock Yards, receipts yesterday, 202 cars, with 3,856 cattle; 200 calves, 1,045 hogs, and 1,489 sheep and lambs.

There was an unusually heavy run of cattle yesterday, but the quality was rather poor. A demand for choice heavy steers could not be satisfied adequately. The market was comparatively slow in trading, buyers and sellers bidding and quoting between rather wide extremes. On the actual sales, however, prices were easier. The best cattle in the early hours of the market brought only $14.50 a hundred weight, one load of 27 cattle, average weight 1,150 pounds, having sold at that figure. Hogs were unchanged from Saturday's price of $19.25, fed and watered.

Lambs were easier, selling down to 20 cents.

Light sheep steady, 14 to 15 cents.

Calves, 14 to 15 cents.

ST. THOMAS WOULD INVEST IN PEAT.

Large Deputation, Fearing Fuel Famile, Will See Councilll.

ST. THOMAS, Aug. 20.—It is reported that a large deputation of interested citizens will wait upon the City Council in a few days asking them to invest the $25,000 appropriated for municipal fuel yards in a factory for the development of one of the large peat deposits that surround the city. The scarcity of coal and wood has caused many persons to fear lest the city be in the throes of a serious fuel famine next winter. It is estimated that at least $50,000 will be required to start operating a peat plant. There are several local capitalists who have signified their readiness of investing money in the venture.

German Press Says Big Retreat Necessary to Give Armies Room

Declare This Strategy Will Enable Ludendorff to Assume the Initiative on a Vast Scale.

PARIS, Aug. 20.—The German press is attempting to reassure its public that a general retreat is necessary on the western front to allow Gen. Ludendorff room to manoeuvre and to assume the initative on a vast scale, the newspapers report. A German retreat, the newspapers say, would be a direct result of the recent allied successes. The newspapers assert that even if the Germans receive reinforcements from Austria they had lost the power to command events, as Marshal Foch has the initiative and will keep it.

German propaganda insists that the German general staff will retain the intiative by forcing premature engagements on the American army and thus wearing it out before it is fully prepared. L'Homme Libre says that the American forces taking part in the Picardy offensive could not be compared in size with those of the French and British. It says that America will soon have a first-class army in France and that it will have airplanes which the German aviators will have reason to fear.

Soldiers Called Out to Quell Japanese Rice Riots

Trouble Threatens to Develop Into a Political Revolt—View Is That Japanese Farmers are Hoarding Millions of Bushels of Rice.

HUN AGENTS FOMENTING TROUBLE

WASHINGTON, Aug. 20.—Food rioting in Japan threatens to develop into political revolt unless prompt steps are taken by the Tokio Government to provide rice for the population, according to the unofficial view here.

German agents may be working among the masses to stir up disorder by taking advantage of the profiteering situation, which is rapidly becoming acute there, it is believed. Anti-annexationists who are strenuously opposing Japanese plans for intervention in Siberia, are also believed to be spurring the people on to bold steps which might unseat the present Ministry.

Class Revolution?

That the germ of class revolution may be spreading to Japan is regarded possible. Japan's political system has not modified greatly in recent years and the democratic ferment of the western European nations is becoming stronger there, especially since the war began.

Latest information here attributes the immediate outbreak to the food situation. Profiteers in rice have cornered the market and are holding the product beyond reach of the working man.

Official View Differs.

Officials, however, scout the theory that pro-German or Bolshevik activities are responsible for the uprising and declare that Socialistic thought is enteirely absent in Japan. There is no political signighcance in the outbreak, they say. Through the strong national military police the Government probably will be able to hold a strong hand over the masses and shortly put down disorder, officials say.

Soldiers Called Out.

Okyo, Aug. 20.—Soldiers have been called out in practically every large city in Japan to aid the police in restraining mobs which have resorted to wanton destruction of the property of the rich men.

In some places the police have shown sympathy with the mobs and refused to disperse them. Disorders which started in Tokio, Tuesday, were quelled by police with the aid of troops.

Reports Are Suppressed.

Tokio, Aug. 20.—Newspapers have been prohibited from printing reports of the progress of the rice riots, and there is an absence of news from the provinces. A statement issued by Minister of the Interior Mizuno says that the governors have assured the Ministry that the disorders are abating steadily.

The organization of proprietors and editors of newspapers have adopted a resolution declaring that the prohibition against news of the riots is an unprecedented and arbitrary interference with the right of free speech as granted by the constitution. They demand a cancellation of the order.

Easiest Way to Remove Ugly Hair Growths

(Beauty Culture.)

Here is a method for removing hair or fuzz that is unfailing and is quite inexpensive: Mix a thick paste with some powdered delatone and water and spread on hairy surface. After 2 or 3 minutes, rub it off, wash the skin and every trace of hair has vanished. No harm or inconvenience results from this treatment, but be careful to get genuine delatone.

Cuff links to match the buttons used on a shirtwaist may be made by joining two of the buttons with strong thread.

HOUSING SCHEME FALLS THROUGH

Guelph Tenders 15 to 20 Per Cent. Above the Estimate.

GUELPH, Aug. 20.—The scheme to erect houses for workingmen in this city has fallen through. The cause of the failure to fill this great want arises from the high price of everything, and the fact that the tenders for the houses are out of sight—from fifteen to twenty per cent. above the estimates of those who were prepared to go ahead and erect at least twenty houses, had the prices been reasonable.

Tenders were opened for seventeen stucco board houses, which it was thought could be built the cheapest, and would prove most serviceable. The committee representing the prominent men behind the scheme were amazed at the figures submitted by the seventeen tenderers for the various trades, which when totalled up were found to be far beyond their estimate. It was hoped that some way could be devised to reduce the figures, but when seen this morning, after talking the matter over with several members of the committee, Mr. D. N. Sanson was exceedingly doubtful, and said the plan evidently could not be carried through on the basis he had proposed.

The Woman Who Changed

By JANE PHELPS

DEEP WATERS

CHAPTER CXLVIII.

That winter we again took up our social life." Kenneth was so well such a good baby, I had no reason to remain at home, or to refuse to entertain. We had a thorough and responsible nurse, and George would not hear to my letting the fact that we had a baby in the house, interfere with us in any way.

I had ceased trying to make George over. Whenever the thought would cross my mind that I might be happier if he were different, I dismissed it at once. I really loved my husband, had always loved him. And now that I had learned to know him to take him as he was, I had ceased to kick against the pricks and was calmly happy and contented. Then one day they brought him home. An automobile had knocked him down as he crossed the street, and he had struck his head on the pavement.

"Concussion," the doctor said as he bent over him.

A trained nurse was installed, the house took on the air of stillness which usually accompanies such an illness. Even Kenneth seemed to realize that something was wrong and was unusually quiet.

For days my husband's life hung in the balance. For days I had scarcely left him, an unspoken prayer constantly on my lips: If God would only spare him. At last the change came, and he crawled slowly back to health. He was not easy to care for in those days of convalescence, but I was so happy that I scarcely noticed when he was cross and grouched because he couldn't get up. Men were all like that when they were ill, at least my brothers always had been.

Just a Man.

When George had fully recovered I had learned one thing through his illness That was that he was just a man, a man who must be humoured, and let have his way. But not one to be afraid of, as I had feared him in the first years of our married life. I tried not to cross him; I never now allowed myself to do the things I knew were annoying or disagreeable to him. In return he also forgot to find fault, was contented, and I think happy—most of the time.

When we were going out and entertaining I saw far more of him than when it was necessary, for any reason, to remain at home. So I gladly gave up to him in his desires in this respect. I had become, so Evelyn assured me, an accomplished hostess, easy and tactful.

"I heard Madge Loring say she wouldn't have believed it possible you were the same girl that bought an etiquette book so that she could study up and avoid making mistakes."

I laughed with Evelyn over the recollection, but I also winced a little as I invariably did when anyone mentioned that episide. I never had forgotten my mortification, and the feeling I had when George burned the book I had in all innocence bought that I might learn to please him.

"Mrs. Loring is very complimentary," then I added. "So are you, Evelyn."

"Really, Helen, I would scarcely know you for the same girl. Sometimes I feel that you are years older than I am, yet when we first met I always felt older. You have so much poise; you never let little things worry you at all nowadays. I can remember when your eyes were often red and swollen."

"I know! I was a regular cry-baby! I wonder George didn't leave me."

"Well, I don't! But do you recall how jealous you used to be of Julia Collins? I don't believe you ever had the slightest reason to be. Now you could hold your own with her anywhere. That last dinner dance of yours when you had all those foreign officers was a wonderful affair. Everyone talked about it for days. And you seemed to do everything so easily."

Easy When One Knows How.

"It IS easy now. But only since I made up my mind to be the kind of a wife my husband wanted me to be. Only since I have put aside my own selfish desires in the greater one of making a happy home for us both. You see Evelyn, I was stubborn too as well as uneducated in the ways of the world; and in the building up of a home for George, I wanted to have it all my way; the easy way for me. I hadn't wisdom enough to know that a woman is more pliable, can more easily fit herself into a new groove than can a man. George had made his place in the social world of Moreland before I married him. Naturally he wanted a wife who could hold that position. So I had to change myself in many ways, but I am sure now that Mrs. Sexton was right, and that it has been good for me."

"Yes—I am sure it has Helen and"—

"You see, Evelyn, George never has asked me to do a really unreasonable thing," I interrupted, "and never anything I thought it wrong to do. He is a thoroughly good man morally, and never would interfere with anyone's convictions. He wanted a wife who could make his home the kind of a home his mother had made for his father. He was impatient of my inability to adapt myself as quickly as he had thought I would—that was all. But"—

"You are awfully good, Helen. Really you are to take all the blame of everything on yourself. I am sure I couldn't!"

"Oh, yes you could. You never had to try to make yourself over you know."

High Heels Put Corns on Toes

Who cares? Corns or calluses lift off without any pain.

Because style decrees that women crowd and buckle up their tender toes in high heeled foot wear, they suffer from corns, then they cut and trim these painful pests which merely makes the corn grow hard. This suicidal habit may cause lockjaw and women are warned to stop it.

A few drops of freezone applied directly upon a sore corn or tender callus gives quick relief and soon the entire corn or callus, root and all, lifts off without pain. Ask the drug store man for a tiny bottle of freezone, which costs but a few cents, but is sufficient to remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet.

Freezone dries in a moment and simply shrivels up the corn or callus without even irritating the surrounding skin.

Women! Keep a bottle of freezone handy on the dresser and never let a corn ache twice.

Dancing on Talcum Powder.

It has been found by experiment that the best dancing floor is made as follows: Upon the ordinary floor a sheet of rubber half an inch thick is spread; a certain smooth surfaced linoleum is laid over this, and talcum powder is sprinkled upon it every day. The highly polished waxed wood floors of a few years ago are too slippery for the modern dances. The shoemakers soon learned this and introduced pumps with pads of rubber inserted in the soles.

High Art.

"Are you blind, prisoner?" inquired the magistrate.

"Yes, your worship."

"You are charged with vagrancy. How did you lose your sight?"

"By a fit of applepiexy, sir."

"But there is a picture on your breast representing an explosion in a mine, through which, it is stated, you became blind. How is this?"

"Please, your worship, I couldn't afford to pay a hartist as could paint applepiexy."—London Answers.

Old Ideas Die Hard

But when you tire of treating eczema internally as a blood disease and apply Dr. Chase's Ointment you will soon be convinced which form of treatment is most effective.

Naturally and gradually the skin is healed as you apply this soothing, antiseptic ointment. The new skin is soft and smooth, and you only wonder that you did not try this treatment sooner.

The Trained Voice.

Lawyers, clergymen and doctors all fail to secure the influence with the people with whom they come in contact because of inability to express their thoughts in an impressive way. Had the voice been trained the same as the eye and the intellect, and the exterior qualities been trained to express like the voice the best and the clearest facts, they would all have been successes. The melodious voice of Henry Clay always charmed his audience everywhere. Wherever he went people flocked to hear him, while the heavy bass tones of Daniel Webster failed to attract and actually drove people away. They preferred to read what he had to say, but wanted personally to hear Clay's pleasing voice.—Medical Record.

The Mystery

By ALVAH JORDAN GARTH

Her heart was throbbing with happiness, her eyes suffused with tears from sheer joy. There had come into the life of artless, humble Elsa Drury all that a true woman cares for—love.

She had just left Adrian Noble, the man who had brought her all this radiance of emotion, his kiss was still warm upon her cheek. Elsa sank down upon the velvety sward amid a cluster of bushes to be alone, to shut out all the world and try to realize the great delight that seemed to be some vision of glory.

She was an orphan, living with her married sister until the Doanes invited her to their home. Mr. Doane was old and feeble, Mrs. Doane was blind. It became Elsa's mission to act as companion for the latter, her constant attendant, and this duty became a cheerful one, for her sightless charge was one of those sweet-souled beings whose patience and gentleness win affection and loyalty.

Mr. Doane died, leaving his widow only one living relative in the world. This was Adrian Noble, her dead sister's only child. Once only, when he was ten years old, she had seen him. Then his parents went to Canada. Five years later Mrs. Doane learned that his parents had died. A few years after that she received a letter from Noble. He told her that he had lost his position and asked for a loan of several hundred dollars. She had gladly sent the money, but did not hear from him again.

Her heart went out to this last of her kin after her husband died; she hungered to have near her one of her own flesh and blood. She had the address of Adrian and it was Elsa to whom she dictated a long letter, reciting her wishes and hopes. She asked her nephew to come to her and cheer her declining days with his presence. And one day a stalwart, clear-eyed young man, full of life and vim, Adrian Noble announced himself.

There was something about him as Elsa first glanced at him that attracted her. The same magnetic influence seemed to arouse a new spirit in Mrs. Doane. The handsome young fellow appeared to possess the qualification of charming every one with whom he came in contact. And Elsa—within a month she knew that she loved this newcomer, and now, at the end of two more, she had just been told that he loved her in return, and the joyousness of it all fairly overwhelmed the fair, innocent girl as she pressed her lips to a rose Adrian had plucked for her.

As Elsa later entered the room where Mrs. Doane sat, she noticed her aged charge with concern. A change had come over the worn, wrinkled face. It bore a new pallor and the hands, tightly clutched, told of some vivid emotion.

"Come here, Elsa," spoke Mrs. Doane. "Mr. Noble has gone to the city?"

"Mr. Noble—Adrian?" uttered Elsa bewilderedly. "How strangely you speak. Has anything happened?"

"Yes, Elsa," replied Mrs. Doane. "The man we have called Adrian Noble is an imposter."

"Oh, Mrs. Doane!" gasped Elsa.

"He shall not enter this house again," spoke Mrs. Doane bitterly. "Elsa, this man is not my nephew. Today he chanced to give me his right hand to guide me across the room. Suddenly I remembered an accident that happened to him when my sister visited us. Adrian fell across a scythe and three fingers were severed at the first joint. This man has no such disfigurement."

Elsa sat like one stunned.

"You must be my eyes, my helper, to solve this mystery. We do not know but that this interloper has murdered Adrian to secure his place. Sightless, helpless myself, I rely upon you to see that this wretch is unmasked. He will be absent until tomorrow. You must visit his room and see if you can discover among his papers a clew to his identity."

Elsa shrank from the ordeal.

Suddenly Mrs. Doane, nervously awaiting her return from upstairs, heard a cry of delight and Elsa came rushing down the stairs and into her presence, some letters in her hand, her eyes shining with rare excitement and hopefulness.

"Oh, Mrs. Doane!" she cried, "perhaps we have done wrong in prying into the most secret affairs of Roy Walden, for that is the name of the—imposter. Dear, good friend, you must know all."

And then Elsa was able from some letters she had found to explain the mystery. Adrian Noble had gone wrong. His devoted friend, Roy Walden, had sought him out and had prevailed on him to change his reckless career. He had induced Adrian to go like a man and accept a prison sentence for engaging in a public riot when under the influence of liquor. Then came the letter from Mrs. Doane. Because, from his tenor Adrian believed that she needed his business advice and help and that it would make her happy to have him with her, he had influenced Roy Walden to assume his place until he was free to appear in person in a redeemed way.

"Mr. Walden is all that is loyal and good!" sobbed Elsa, and Mrs. Doane said gently:

"He shall be to me, like Adrian, as an own son."

THE HILL OF TARA.

Where In Ancient Times the Kings of Ireland Were Crowned.

In the county of Meath is supposed to have stood the hall of Tara, celebrated as being the palace of the ancient Irish kings. There seems to be no doubt that on the hill of Tara the national assemblies met once a year to consult on the affairs of the kingdom and to make laws. The lawgivers were a class of druids called Brehons, who acted as magistrates and judges. They did not hold their courts of justice in any hall, but seated themselves on the top of a hill in the open air, where they heard all complaints that were brought before them and decided every cause according to their own ideas of right and wrong.

The hill of Tara is also famous in Irish history as the spot on which the kings were crowned. The throne, or seat of inauguration, was a black stone, which was called Lea Fail, or the fatal stone, said to have been brought in the early ages from Spain, and it was therefore held in high veneration. It was either borrowed by Feargus the Great, an Irish chief, or else it was carried away, among other spoils, by the Scots in one of their invasions of Ireland and was ever afterward used as a coronation seat of the kings of Scotland at the abbey of Scone until it was conveyed away by force of arms, together with the crown and scepter, by Edward I. to England, who placed it in Westminster abbey, where it still exists and forms the basis of the coronation chair to this day. —Argonaut.

Africa's Pygmy Antelopes.

The pygmy antelope of the Gold Coast of Africa is the smallest of cud chewing animals. It stands about ten inches high at the withers—that is, about as high as a fox terrier. The male has minute horns that run straight back in the line of the forehead. The pygmy antelope was described in 1705 by the Dutch traveler Bosman, who, in his "Description of Guinea," says that it is called the "king of the harts" by the natives. By English writers it is often called the "royal antelope."

Do one thing at a time and the big things first.—Lincoln.

Grandmother Gave It To Mother, Mother To Me, I To My Baby.

Read what Mrs. Wm. Gray, Jacquet River, N. B., has to say about Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. She writes: "There is no medicine I know of that can come up with Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. It has been in our house for forty years. My grandmother gave it to my mother, she to me, and I to my baby. For summer complaint it has no equal. I never miss a chance of telling my neighbours about it. I would not think it safe to go to the country without a bottle of it. It has saved us many a doctor's bill."

For the past 72 years Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has been recognized by both the people and the medical profession as the greatest remedy known for all cases of diarrhoea, dysentery, cramps, colic, pains in the stomach, cholera infantum, cholera morbus, seasickness and all bowel complaints.

There are so many spurious "strawberry" preparations on the market today that it would be well for you to see that the name "Dr. Fowler's" is on every bottle that you buy.

Late Sir Benjamin Stone "Snapshotted" All Over the World.

Sir Benjamin Stone, dean of photographers of public events, who has just died at the age of seventy-six in England, represented East Birmingham in Parliament for fifteen years. At a complimentary luncheon given him by members of the House of Commons he once was called "photographer-in-chief to the Speaker and the House of Commons."

From youth he was a great traveler and his difficulty in purchasing scenes of the places he visited was what turned him into a photographer himself. As long ago as 1868 he began a pictorial record of the life of the nations. He interested others in this work, and the immense stores of photographs in the British Museum are the direct result.

In the course of the sitting of the first sitting of the First Parliament of which he was a member he took a picture of every member and of officials and journalists as well.

On the occasion of the Coronation of King Edward, Sir Benjamin took about 300 photographs, which were very useful to the officials who prepared the ceremony when King George succeeded.

Sir Benjamin's most amusing traveling experiences was when he went to Brazil to photograph the eclipse of the sun. He stayed for a time at Sears, and while he was there a revolution broke out. The governor had become unpopular and the soldiers rose and "fired" him out. Sir Benjamin made arrangements with a photographer to get pictures of the incidents, and the way the soldiers posed for the camera was quite like comic opera. They had placed cannon across the street wherein the governor's palace was situated, and when they were ready to begin the attack they all stood up and posed for the picture. When the governor had bolted and they had secured the battered palace, they sent back for the photographer to come and take more pictures.

Another adventure was in China. He had been "taking" a temple when he noticed that a large crowd had gathered, so he turned round in order to get a picture of the mob. There was a great murmuring, which grew into a hubbub. He asked the guide what the matter was, and he replied, "They say that you have taken their spirit from them." "Nonsense," Sir Benjamin retorted. "I have taken nothing from them." "Haven't you got their likeness in your box?" the guide inquired, and when this was admitted he remarked triumphantly, "Then, how can you say that you have taken nothing?" It was an opportunity for blackmail not to be missed, and the photographer had to distribute large sums before he was allowed to depart in peace.

Commends Sailor's Bravery.

For gallantry in rescuing from drowning a lad eight years of age Secretary Daniels has commended Arthur Otto Radcliffe, a seaman of the United States navy. Alongside of the United States steamship Wadsworth, on which the sailor was stationed, lay a tug. A small boy played about the deck with no thought of danger. Suddenly he fell overboard. Before the warning came the child had floated seventy-five yards or more from the tug and ship. Then Radcliffe came into action. Jumping into the water, he swam to the boy and brought him to safety. Radcliffe enlisted in the navy in 1915, at Des Moines, Iowa.

Slashed His Friend.

Magistrate—Are you interested in this case? Witness For the Prosecution—Yes, sir; the prisoner cut my acquaintance.

Cland—But you certainly encouraged me to propose. Claudia—Well, I could not very well turn you down until you did, could I?

NEW OATS HURT HORSES

Fall Threshed Crop Must be Fed Judiciously.

Sudden Changes of Feed Particularly To Be Prevented—Waste of Farm Machinery Often Spells Difference Between Profit and Loss for Farmer — Have Corn Machinery In First-Class Order.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

EACH year brings a certain amount of trouble through the feeding of new grain to live stock, and in seasons like the present when food is scarce and the supply of old grain has been exhausted before the freshly-threshed grain is ready there is a likelihood that more new grain than usual will be fed to the live stock and consequently greater care should be exercised to avoid digestive derangements.

The horse is generally considered a little more susceptible to digestive troubles following changes in feeding practice than are other classes of farm live stock. It is always well to make changes very gradually and carefully. The main grain feed of the horse in this country is oats, and new oats should always be fed with great care. Hard-worked horses should, if it is at all possible, be fed old oats and the new grain left to dry and cure for a few weeks after threshing. At any rate to avoid colic, acute indigestion and inflammation new oats should at first form only a part of the grain ration, being mixed with old oats and possibly a little bran and the percentage of the new grain gradually increased until the horses are on full feed. Sudden changes from old to new grain are especially dangerous with the horse and particularly with the horse at heavy work and on a heavy concentrate ration. There is, of course, a difference due to the time of threshing. Grain which remains in stack or mow for several weeks and thus becomes dry and cured is not so dangerous as that threshed directly from the field or immediately after harvesting.

As a rule heavy feeding of grain is not practiced with cattle and sheep on pasture. Where such is the case, however, changing from old to new grain should be done with care and the substitution should be, if possible, gradual. If the ration must, of necessity, be composed entirely of newly-threshed grain it should at first be comparatively light and increased very gradually.

Pigs usually handle newly-threshed grain without much trouble, although if on very heavy rations when finishing for market a little care should be taken that they be not thrown off their feed. Newly-threshed grain is difficult to grind fine and is not easily stored and large quantities of the ground grain may not be stored in bulk as heating and musting will result in lowering the feeding value of the grain by rendering it unpalatable and less digestible. Musty grain is more dangerous than clean, new grain.—Prof. W. Toole, Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph.

Get Corn Binder In Shape.

To handle the corn crop expeditiously, economically, and successfully some kind of a corn harvester is an absolute necessity, and it must be in good working order. Various cheap machines have been tried and found wanting, but the corn binder has become a permanent fixture on a large number of farms in this province.

There are several kinds of corn binders on the market, and while each kind may have its special merit as to the arrangement of its essential parts trouble must arise if these parts are not properly cleaned, oiled and kept in alignment.

The advancing part of the corn binder consists of two diverging jaws which may be raised or lowered by an arrangement of levers. Attached to each jaw are two or three travelling chains, furnished with fingers. Their function is to convey the stalks to the binding deck in an upright position as the machine advances. The chains should not be too loose or they will ride the teeth of the sprocket and slip down the teeth. Machines having packers,—to prevent ears being knocked off by jamming the stalks behind the needle, see to it that the packers yield slightly while the bundle is being tied. Too many bundles crowding the carrier will interfere with the binding attachment properly freeing itself. The knotter and the needle cannot do their work efficiently when covered with rust. Polish them with fine emery cloth. If the knife of the knotter is dull sharpen it or it will cause trouble by pulling the twine from the hook before the knot is made. As it requires considerable power to cut the sappy stubble, and not tear it up by the roots, the knife should be thoroughly keen, otherwise it will clog with grass and weeds. The stubble-cutter should also be kept in good condition. It is a useful device, and when rightly sharpened and adjusted does not add very much to the draft.

Do not depend on a superficial examination of the machine to acquaint yourself if it needs repairing, because if you do, you will surely miss some small, but vital part needing attention, if not replacing. If these break during the busy season they will cause greater breakages and serious loss.

Clean the machine thoroughly with benzine, gasoline or kerosene. Go over every part of the machine, and while doing this you will locate loose bolts and worn or broken parts. Oil-holes and wells should be cleaned out, and new waste, if required, put into the wells. Refill the grease cups; in short, renew and repair anything and everything that requires attention. — Prof. John Evans, Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph.

The Slow One.

"Would you," he said after they had been sitting in the dark for a long time, "be angry with me if I were to kiss you?"

She was silent for a moment. Then in tones the meaning of which was not to be mistaken she replied:

"What do you suppose I turned down the light an hour and a half ago?"

And yet he wondered, poor fool, how other young men who had started far in the rear were able to pass him in race of life.

A Floral Chameleon.

A marvelous flower has been discovered in the isthmus of Tehuantepec. Its chief peculiarity is the habit of changing its color during the day. In the morning it is white; when the sun is at its zenith it is red, and at night it is blue. The red, white and blue flower grows on a tree about the size of a guava tree, and only at noon does it give out any perfume.

For your guidance in estimating, we might say that The Examiner is printing and distributing to the Merchants, for use on Dollar Day, 25,000 blanks, and it is only necessary to estimate what number each purchaser thinks will be used on the great day. Should any store run short of blanks, The Examiner will print more, so that the number printed might reach as high as 40,000. The number of estimates put in the last Dollar Day Campaign was in the neighbourhood of 10,000. With this information, an estimate can be made before coming to town. Of course as many estimates can be made as the purchaser has blanks, and they will get one with every Dollar purchase they make.

PRIDE OF THE UGLY CLUB.

He Was the Prize Member of an Old New York Organization.

In the New York Evening Post of May 11, 1814, appeared the following notice:

UGLY CLUB.

Ugly brothers, hither fly.
With you bring the varying eye—
Bring here cock eyes and eyes askance
That cannot pass one tender glance.
Bring goggle eyes and piercers, too;
Eyes green, white, red, black and blue.
Bring with you the eagle's sight
To see your heart and keep it right.
But bring shortsighted eyes to spy
The mote that's in your brother's eye.

The members of the Ugly club are directed to attend a special meeting at Ugly hall, 4 Wall street, on Thursday evening, the 12th inst., at 7 o'clock, to take into consideration the propriety of bestowing some suitable mark of distinction on a member who lately while viewing himself in the secretary's ugly mirror was so much pleased with his own ugly phiz that he involuntarily let fall the glass, which was dashed to pieces, and exclaimed, "I shall yet be president of the club!" The astonishing fortitude of this ugly member, in the frequent and public acknowledgment of his natural deformities, deserves the highest commendation.

The members are requested to be punctual in their attendance, as the new members elected at the last meeting and six of the ugly beauties are expected to appear.

The propriety of admitting ladies into the club will be discussed.

By order of His Ugliness.

A Round Trip.

The attorney for a street railroad company in a Kentucky town was examining a skinny sixteen-year-old negro boy who had sued for injuries ostensibly incurred in a collision on the highway.

"You say," he asked, "that when this street car hit that wagon you were riding on the front seat of the wagon?"

"Dat's whut I said," answered the little darky.

"And you say the force of the blow knocked you up in the air?"

"Yas, suh—'way up in de air."

"Well, how long did you stay up there?" demanded the attorney.

"Not no longer dan it tuck me to git down!" answered the truthful complainant promptly.—Saturday Evening Post.

Rays From a Searchlight.

The paths traversed by rays from a searchlight depend on the form of curvature of the mirror. If flat, the paths of reflected rays would be the same as those of the rays received; if the arc of a circle, the rays will be reflected to one bright focus. To have a band of parallel rays leave the mirror it must be the arc of a parabola. Then straight rays will be reflected all parallel to each other. In air, the intensity of this beam of light would diminish, but in absolute vacuum would be as intense at any distance.—New York American.

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS WITH ECZEMA.

Mrs. Link, 12 Walker Street, Halifax, N.S., states:—"After three years of miserable torture and sleepless nights with terrible eczema, and after trying over a dozen remedies without obtaining anything but slight temporary relief, I have been perfectly and entirely cured by using Dr Chase's Ointment. After the third of fourth application of this grand Ointment I obtained relief and a few boxes were sufficient to make a thorough cure

INDIAN HOSPITALITY.

A Brand of Their Own, Not "Stingy Like the White Man."

The early experiences of the white practitioner among reservation Indians make a chapter of encounters with aboriginal prejudice not wholly finished. Even his own life was not safe if the doctor ventured too near the borderland of prejudice, and if a death occurred at the beginning of his practice he was likely to be avoided for the rest of his sojourn. Many an Indian came for the first dose and was never seen or heard of afterward—whether death or distaste was the result of his visit the doctor might never know. Or an entire bottle of cough strup would be consumed at once, on the theory that if a teaspoonful was good a bottleful would be better.

The constant hospitality practiced by Indians, and the custom of sharing the last crumb, is a phase of the food question difficult to be appreciated by whites. As long as an Indian has any subsistence, his neighbors and friends come a-visiting, to remain as long as the food holds out. To be inhospitable or "stingy like the white man" is an opprobrium which only the hardiest Indian can socially survive. This Indian virtue bars the way to an equalization of any distribution of food, and is the cause of many of those cases of "Indians starving."

DIED FOR HIS IDOL.

Heroism That Led to Napoleon's Title of "The Little Corporal."

It is related that Napoleon was once badly defeated at Coblentz by the Cossacks. After the battle he was surrounded by enemies and would have lost his life had he not been saved by the presence of mind of one of his soldiers, Corporal Spohn.

Realizing that Napoleon's only chance for life was in getting off the battle field unrecognized, the corporal begged the emperor to change hats and horses with him. The change was made ere the smoke of battle had cleared away, and Napoleon, with his corporal's hat and mounted on a poor steed, rode away unnoticed, the Cossacks crowding around the corporal. Taking him prisoner, they led him in triumph to the Russian general. There the mistake was soon discovered, and the corporal's brave act cost him his life.

According to the Coblentz legend, Napoleon, in remembrance of Spohn's self sacrifice, always after this preferred a corporal's uniform to any other and wore it so often that his men came to speak of him familiarly as "Le Petit Caporal."—From "The Rhine," Translated by G. C. T. Bartley.

Mastery of Music.

The mastery of music never just "came naturally" to any human being. The world has never known a more industrious worker than the illustrious Franz Schubert. Yet, if to any one in the world music "came naturally," it seemed to come so to him. When the school principal asked his harmony teacher how young Franz Schubert was progressing, the teacher said: "He is a wonder. Whenever I explain anything new to him, he always seems already to know it. He must have received his knowledge straight from heaven." Yet, in spite of such superb gifts, there was never a harder worker than he. And don't you think that we with our lesser gifts, should follow his example? If he with all his heaven sent genius could not succeed without strenuous daily labor, how can we hope to accomplish anything worth while without ceaseless, patient and conscientious toil?—Woman's World.

Your Castle of Thought.

Your Castle of Thought is the most sacred possession you have.

It is your real estate, your house of prayer.

You are the agent. Shall you let in disorderly tenants?

Shall you harbor Doubt, a sickly tenant, to infect well meaning tenants? Doubt is about the worst tenant you can admit. Turn him out.

Doubting some one, any one, never gets you anything.

If the one you doubt is unworthy, then that is his problem, not yours. Give him this to read and let him come and take treatment.

Come and get your thought changed, and all things will be made new.—New York Sun.

By the Rules of the Game.

Little Mary Lou was eager to get back to her new doll and didn't know there was going to be any dessert. She slipped quietly from her chair, hoping she would not be observed.

Out in the hall she met the cook with the ice cream, and as quietly as she had left it she slipped back to her accustomed place at the table.

"Mary Lou," said her mother reprovingly, "I thought you had finished your dinner. It isn't polite to come back."

"But I didn't excuse myself, mother," the little girl said quickly.—New York Post.

No Place For Thumb Prints.

Mrs. Flatbush—And you think your little boy steals your pies?

Mrs. Bensonhurst—Somebody does, and I suspect Tommie.

"Well, there's a way you can tell."

"How?"

"By the thumb prints."

"Oh, no, I can't. When Tommie gets through with a pie there aren't any thumb prints!"

Ancient Cloisonne Enamels.

The ancient artists who made those exquisite cloisonne enamels which bring such high prices made them by the following laborious method: The outlines of the design to be executed in enamel were cut out in the metal plate in such a manner that between the limits of the colors in the enamel a narrow metal ribbon was left standing. The space within the outlines was worked out with the graving tool, the surfaces left standing being made as rough as possible. In the hollows the mass, made into a thick paste with lavender oil or water, was placed and fused fast in the muffle, this process being frequently repeated. Finally the surface was ground and polished.

Stifled His Reproaches.

There is a touch of savage humor in the old time story of a Spanish pilot captured by Van Noort. Becoming ill, the Spaniard believed that the Dutch wanted to poison him, "and, therefore," it is recorded in the explorers' journal, "we threw him into the sea, leaving him to sink, to the end that he should not ever again reproach us with any treachery."

The Old School.

There aren't enough gentlemen of the old school left to have a class reunion.

SPECIFIC FOR BRONCHITIS.

The turpentine used in Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine is not the ordinary commercial article, which is little used because of the unpleasantness of taste, but is specially extracted from tamarac and spruce gum and so combined with other valuable ingredients as to be at the same time pleasant to use and wonderfully effective in the cure of affections of the throat, bronchial tubes and lungs.

TRAPPING ELEPHANTS.

In India Tame Animals Aid in Capturing the Wild Ones.

In view of the vast strength possessed by full grown elephants, it seems at first sight almost incredible that they can be captured in herds and quickly subdued to the will of their masters.

At the present time, in Mysore, the regular method of capturing wild elephants is for a large number of natives to go into the jungle, some mounted on tamed elephants and many on foot, and to make a great noise and hullabaloo, which results in driving herds of the wild elephants into stockades, or often into ponds of water, which have previously been surrounded on all sides, except at the approaches, by immensely strong palisades. As soon as the herd is cornered the passages that had been left open are securely closed, and then the trained elephants are brought into play to cajole and subdue the perplexed prisoners.

In India elephants are no longer captured, as they still are in Africa, by means of huge pitfalls in the ground. In these traps they are often seriously injured or killed. The Indian elephant is somewhat smaller than the African and differs from it in other ways—as, for instance, in the fact that tusks are possessed only by the males, while both sexes are provided with them in Africa. In general, also, the tusks of African elephants are nearly twice as large as those of their Indian relatives, a single pair sometimes weighing as much as 250 or 300 pounds.—Spokane Spokesman-Review.

WAGNER'S "PARSIFAL."

Its Cold Reception at First Moved Hans Sachs to Fury.

When Wagner's "Parsifal" was first performed in Baireuth, the critic Hans Sachs was almost the only one of all the writing fraternity to welcome it as a great work of genius. To the ears of the others its rude realism sounded unmusical. They wanted melody like that Verdi was turning out in Italy, Bizet in Paris and a few minor composers in their own Berlin.

But Sachs was a man of broader mold. He heard the great music of "Parsifal" with unprejudiced ears and recognized the genius of the man. He shouted it abroad in his writings and became furious at a world that would not, perhaps could not, find pleasure in the dramatic voices of the orchestra, its vivid emotionalism and marvelous appeal to the aesthetical nature that is in every man and woman. He knew that the Germans were merely refusing to listen, save for melody, and finally he told them that even in the melodic field Wagner was the greatest of them all.

Sachs has written eloquently of Wagner's melody, beside which the melody of the Italians is pallid, anaemic, insignificant. Only now and then, he said, were the Italian melodists other than artificial. Wagner's melody was the spontaneous song of a musical heart. The "Good Friday Spell" was the most exquisite song of praise ever written by any man, no less a song because it was wordless, sung only by the violin and woodwinds.—Detroit Free Press.

A Financial Shock.

A man went to a local bank with a check which there was no cash on deposit to meet. When the paying teller declined to respond the applicant loudly demanded to see the cashier.

"We have no 'cash here' for you," quietly responded the teller.

The man with the check saw the point. He moved in circles till he found his way out, tobogganed down the front steps and was led a block by a policeman before sufficiently recovered to make explanation.

The Acme of Proposals

By EDITH V. ROSS

One day Marguerite Phillips was walking in the grounds about her father's stately mansion when she heard something drop. Glancing about her, she saw on the ground a bit of paper fluttering in the wind. Going to it, she found it attached by a string to a stone. Opening the paper, she read:

I am not free to enter your grounds for a near view of your ravishing beauty, but there is nothing to prevent my sailing over you and admiring you from a distance.

Naturally Marguerite turned her gaze upward and saw an aeroplane passing over her head.

She had read many stories of woo-ings, but never anything like this. Huntsmen had appeared to maidens in the depths of forests to speak their love; sailors had been washed ashore from wrecked vessels to love fisher lassies who had rescued them; fugitives from an enemy had suddenly arisen from the earth before girls to excite pity which is akin to love, but never before had Marguerite known a case of woman being wooed from the clouds.

As to her own experience, she had been courted by numerous suitors, but never except in commonplace fashion. In the whole list of her woolings there was not a single new idea for a proposal. It was therefore natural that by this strange method of announcement of a man's love for her she should be much moved. A pleasurable excitement stirred within her, tingling to the tips of her fingers. She followed with her eyes the disappearing aeroplane and pictured a man fit to ride among the clouds looking down upon those who were crawling like worms on the earth.

How godlike seemed this heavenly wanderer compared with any of those who had yet sought her love! Soldiers, sailors, men of wealth, men of intellect, men of genius had been rejected by her, and, though she did not realize the cause of their failure to win her, there was one fundamental reason—none of them had wooed her in a way to strike her imagination. He who had come nearest to success was one with whom she was riding in an automobile. Driving toward a precipice, he swore that if she would not love him both should go down to a frightful death. She yielded, but when safe on terra firma availed herself of a woman's privilege to change her mind.

The aeronaut passed from her sight toward the setting sun, his airboat rocking gracefully, like a bird, between two clouds, at last plunging down behind another, as if going to his home in the blood red orb. Clasping her hands and raising her eyes still higher into the unhorizoned heavens, she exclaimed:

"Was ever a Greek girl more honored by the wooing of a god than I by this daring rover of the ethereal blue?"

Marguerite waited in anxious expectation for the ethereal lover to appear again, or, rather, for his next message, for she had not yet seen him. She sat at her window in the uppermost story of the house gazing skyward, and every time she saw a bird soaring in the far distant heavens she pressed her hand to her heart, exclaiming, "It is he!" When the weather permitted she mounted to the roof, where a bower had been built, and there waited for her eagle lover.

One day while on the roof she saw coming an aeroplane. It flew not more than a hundred feet directly above her, and a bit of paper fluttered down upon the roof. But, alas, she saw not the aerial driver, for until nearly over her head he had kept a high altitude, dropping like a stone and catching himself a moment before the white paper came down like a snowflake in the sunlight. Disappointed in not seeing her lover of the clouds, Marguerite feverishly read her message:

Tell me that you will be mine. If you refuse I will soar higher and higher till I am lost to earth.

Marguerite provided herself with an immense piece of cardboard, laid it flat on the roof and with a brush and a pot of black paint wrote in enormous letters, "Come to me."

A few days later the aeroplane flew over the house, turned and settled down on the roof. Marguerite's heart was in her throat.

Out stepped John Williams, the man she had last refused.

"Marguerite," he said, "when you refused me a year ago you told me that my proposal was the most matter of fact, the most distasteful, that had been spoken or written by all the men you had refused. Loving you madly, I resolved that if this absence of romance was all that separated us I would strive to renew my offer in a manner more suited to your taste. I studied to enable myself to woo you from the clouds. I can do no more; I can rise no higher into the heavens for your sweet sake. Love me, dearest, or I will fly from here and you shall see me sail into the infinite ocean of space never to see me more."

He knelt, took her hand and kissed it.

"John," she said, "you are the only man of all my suitors who has made a proposal that dwarfs any of those pictured by the most skillful novelists."

She fell into his arms.

"Let our bridal," she whispered, "be as beautiful as your wooing. I will sit beside you in your flight, and above the golden edged cloud we will be made one."

"How about the parson?" asked Mr. Williams.

"The eagle shall marry us."

Not finding the eagle, when they came down they called on a justice of the peace.

Two Story Lake In Mexico.

One of the wonders of Mexico is the salt producing lake near Salinas station on the Tampico division of the Mexican Central Railway, 72 miles west of San Luis Potosi. It may well be termed a two storey lake, for at times there is a lake of fresh water overlying the salt lake. A water tight roof of green mud separates the fresh from the salt water. For a large part of the year there is no fresh water lake there. The sun licks it up soon after the rainy season is over. The salt secured from this lake goes all over Mexico. The lake has been worked about 65 years. The whole town of 5,000 people makes its living from the salt.

An Easy One.

"Here's one for you," said Tom to Carl, his playmate. "A dog was tied to a rope ten feet long. Twenty feet away was a fat, juicy bone. How did the dog get to that bone?"

"Oh, that is an old one," said Carl. "You want me to say, 'I give it up,' and you will say, 'that is what the other cur did'."

"No, you're wrong, for the dog got the meat."

"Well, how did he do it?"

"Why, the other end of the rope was not tied."

Dollar Day Promises to be Bigger and Better Than Ever

Added Attractions for Thrifty Shoppers From Both City and Country.

MERCHANTS WILL AID

"Dollar Day" always the big day with the economical shopper promises added attractions this year for the resident and out of town buyers. To begin with the day has been happily chosen from a point of time as the parents are just beginning to wonder how to outfit the school boy and girl and now the merchants have come to their aid with real live bargains making every line of needed clothing and boots within easy reach of the parents' purse. The day is to be one big outing for all not only to meet the friends you haven't seen for weeks but all the out of town ones who will combine the opportunity of economical purchases with a wind up at the Chautauqua to see the Ben Greet players in "The Comedy of Errors."

Working Overtime.

Mr. Griffin had spent an anxious afternoon at the office and hurried home at an unusually early hour.

"How do you feel, dear? What did the doctor say?" he questioned his wife as she lay on a couch, her eyes half closed.

"Oh, he asked me to put out my tongue," she murmured.

"Yes?"

"And after looking at it he said, 'Overworked'."

Mr. Griffin heaved an audible sigh of relief. "I have perfect faith in that doctor, Mabel," said he firmly. "You will have to give it a rest."

THE FOE OF GERMS.

Tobacco Gets Away With More Than Than Half the Microbes.

While it has long been known that tobacco smoke is a valuable preventive against infection during the epidemic of a contagious disease, it is only recently that an analysis of smoke-laden air in an East-end district has been contrasted with equally dense air in which tobacco fumes were lacking. These analyses have shown that more than one half of the harmful germs had been destroyed by the tobacco smoke. This fact has unconsciously been the means of preventing large loss of life, as was noted in the recent cholera epidemic in Germany, when workers in cigar factories were found to be immune to cholera, and wherein the victims were mainly from the non-smokers of the city.

Experiments conducted in a cholera-stricken house, one floor of which was occupied with a cigar factory, led Professor Wencke, of the Imperial Institute of Berlin, to the conclusion that the cholera germs cannot endure tobacco smoke. It was found that saliva containing virulent germs was completely sterilized by five minutes' exposure to tobacco smoke.

It was further discovered that, although the water used in the tobacco factory, both for drinking water and in moistening the cigars, was full of septic bacteria, not a cigarmaker sickened, and the cigars themselves were free of the deadly peril. Determining to put the issue to a drastic test, a few tobacco leaves were moistened with water, a glass tumblerful of which contained over a million active germs, whereupon it was found that within twenty-four hours every one of the bacilli was dead.

It has been a matter of common knowledge that inflammations of the mouth are fended off by the use of tobacco, and that unhealthy conditions of the mouth can never be traced to smoking, unless the habit is excessive. Now it appears that the smoker in a crowded room is truly a benefactor to humanity instead of the selfish brute some people would have us believe.

Steam-Dried Hay Now.

Each year finds the farmer more of a mechanic, as machine after machine appears to take the place of the decreasing supply of manual labor. The up-to-date farm now has its machine shop and farmer mechanic. The farmer complains that for five years past he has been obliged constantly to purchase new labor-saving machinery.

On the other hand, had it not been for these new inventions many would have been obliged to go out of business. The latest thing is steam-cured hay, which makes the farmer independent of cloudy or rainy weather in haying time. The green grass is hauled to the hay factory, unloaded at one end of the plant, and 30 minutes later emerges at the other end perfectly cured, ready for the barn or bale press.

In case of rain a canvas cover insures arrival at the barn without wetting. The farmer has about given up his time-honored trip to the grist-mill, and here comes the hay mill. Frequent showers make good grass but much of this is ruined in the process of sun-drying. The steam drier is independent of weather, and moreover, turns out a better product, and can work nights.

Always on Time.

A man who is constitutionally late surprised his friends by leaving the house at 1 o'clock to keep a 2 o'clock appointment.

"Jim's watch must be wrong or he wouldn't have started so early," they said. "He will surely be on time today. Where in the world can he be going?"

"He is going to a funeral," volunteered one who knew. "He is one of the pall-bearers. Very seldom are pall-bearers behind time. I have known men who were late on every other imaginable occasion—late for their own weddings even — but if chosen for pall-bearers they always came up to the mark."

Why They Worshiped Cats.

W. J. Showalter explains in the National Geographic Magazine why the ancient Egyptians worshiped cats. They noticed that where there were cats there was no bubonic plague. They did not know, of course, that it was the fleas on rats that spread the disease.

AN UNSAFE JOB.

To Be a King In Southeastern Europe Is Hazardous.

A king or an heir to a throne in the Balkan states holds the most hazardous position among royalties. The murder of Archduke Francis Ferdinand and the Duchess of Hohenberg added two more names to the list of royal murders.

Compared with other sections of the world, the 200,000 square miles of Balkan territory present the climax of murder and political intrigue, and the rulers therefore are forced to live in utter loneliness and seclusion.

In the few months that have elapsed since his accession to the throne of Albania Prince William has been in constant terror of his life. Austrian and Italian warships linger within range of his castle at Durazzo, while 500 of their sailors are in constant attendance on the prince.

Twice he has been forced to take refuge on men-of-war while Mussulman insurgents stormed the Albanian capital. Every possible precaution has been taken to guard him, but his life is constantly in danger.

The assassination of King Alexander and Queen Draga of Servia at Belgrade in June, 1903, was one of the most tragic in history. With them were slain two of the ministry, the queen's two brothers and two members of the royal guard, who attempted to protect them.

There had been no previous hint of a plot or uprising. The city of Belgrade had been draped with flags in commemmoration of the anniversary of the assassination of Prince Michael, who was slain June 11, 1868, in the park at Topschider, and a requiem mass was being said in his honor.

March 18, 1913, King George I. of Greece was assassinated while walking on the streets of Saloniki. A previous attempt on his life had been unsuccessful.

Other regicides and political murders in this little territory include the following:

July, 25, 1895 — Stanislaus Stambouloff, ex-Premier of Bulgaria, killed by four persons armed with knives and revolvers.

Sept. 7, 1878—Pasha Mehemet Ali, murdered by Albanians.

June 4, 1876—Hussem Avni and other Turkish ministers killed by Hassam, a Circassian officer.

June 4, 1876—Abdul Aziz, Sultan of Turkey, assassinated.

June 10, 1878—Prince Michael of Servia, killed.

Aug. 13, 1860—Daniel, Prince of Servia, slain.

Oct. 9, 1831—Cato D'Istria, Greek count and statesman, tortured and killed.

The people of the various kingdoms are exceedingly patriotic, but when this passion turns against a king or official an assassination follows.

The Ancient Stone Slingers.

It has been said that Asiatic nations excelled others in the use of the sling, and the slingers of an ancient army used their little weapons with terrible effect. "These natives have such skill," says one old historian, "that it very rarely happens that they miss their aim. What makes them so great in the use of the sling is the training given them from their earliest years by their mothers, who set up a piece of bread hung at the end of a rod for a target and let their children remain without food until they have hit it, when the child who is the victor receives the bread as the reward of his skill and patience."

Bismarck and Music.

Bismarck's utterances regarding music are compiled in a book by Kendell, "Furst und Furstin Bismarck, Erinnerungen aus den Jahren 1846-1872." Kendell once saw the man of blood and iron shed tears during a performance of Beethoven's Sonata Appasionata. His favorite composers were Beethoven and Schubert. The only thing he did not like in their works was the variations. These, he said, "do not speak to the heart." Concerning the sonata just referred to, he remarked: "This is like the singing and sobbing of a whole human life. If I heard this music often I should always be brave."

Drowsiness.

Drowsiness during the day, if a person has slept well the night before, is often caused by indigestion. Often this is remedied by drinking something very hot, like cocoa or coffee. The brain needs a mild stimulant. Lassitude of the body is not always an indication of illness or laziness.

AN UNLUCKY BRIG.

Once Abandoned, the Marie Celeste Came to a Bad End.

There are few people who have not heard of the case of the American brig Marie Celeste, which in 1872 was inexplicably abandoned in calm weather off the Azores by a crew never after heard from. Few, however, know that it ended its career many years later at the hands of the barrator.

On its last voyage it cleared from Boston for Port au Prince, Haiti, ostensibly with a cargo of valuable general merchandise, insured for $30,000. When within a few miles of its destination it went ashore near Miragoane and became a total wreck. The captain, Parker, promptly sold the cargo, sight unseen, to American Consul Mitchell for $500. Mitchell saved it at some trouble, but lived to wish he hadn't.

When the underwriters' agent arrived on the scene to investigate, he found several funny things about the cargo. One case shipped as cutlery and insured for $1,000 contained dog collars worth $50. Barrels supposed to contain expensive liquors were full of worthless dregs, a consignment of salt fish insured for $5,000 was rotten, and other articles mentioned in the bill of lading proved to be in keeping.

Consul Mitchell, not only duped, but outlawed, stood not on the order of his going, but cleared out for tall timber. The captain of the brig was tried in the United States district court in Boston, convicted and sentenced to a long term in prison, where he died three months later.—David A. Wasson in Outing Magazine.

WHISKER CULTURE.

A Critic Who Does Not Like the Hanging Garden Effect.

In the American Magazine James Montgomery Flagg, writing a piece on "Whiskerculture," contributes the following permit to cultivate hanging gardens on the face:

"This is to certify that the bearer, — —, has permission to stand on the grass in any part of Central park, or other city parks, during May and June and pretend he is a spiraea bush.

"If by any chance he should begin to bear currants or marrons glaces he must allow the commissioner of parks first pickings.

"He is required also to permit any uniformed official of the Long Island railroad lost and found department to enter his beard at will, without a written order, and search for lost purses, umbrellas or packages of pressed beef or coins of any denomination.

"On the 2d of February he agrees to step out from his cocoon and, if he sees his own shadow, report it immediately to the board of health and crawl back again.

"In going over his privet hedge in the fall, before putting it in camphor, he must destroy all nests he comes across.

"On national and state holidays he is permitted to string Japanese lanterns in any part of the shrubbery above Forty second street, but he is forbidden to set off any Roman candles or red light in it.

"During the open season for grouse or caribou he must have his entire beard adequately patrolled. He agrees to report to Washington if any careless tourists start fires in any portion of its tract, especially near any ranches. He agrees to see before retiring that no lighted cigar butts are left smoldering in the underbrush.

"If all these regulations are faithfully carried out his beard will be set aside as a national park in January of the following year."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

"Established 1776"

By VICTOR REDCLIFFE

Old Anthony Wayne, pottering at a lock, looked up with manifest interest as his only daughter, Millicent, came in at the door of the old shop, bright as a ray of sunlight with her wild rose face and neatly fitting gingham dress. Her eyes were clouded with a certain gravity, but she smiled cheerily.

"Any letter?" inquired her father eagerly.

"Not in this mail, dear"—responded Millicent.

"Don't try to look happy when you probably feel more like crying," almost roughly interrupted the old man. "Hector has forgotten us, I reckon. He has probably made his fortune and has come back to spend it royally on himself."

"That isn't like Hector," said Millicent, but her voice was low and unsteady. Then her dainty lips puckered and she passed into the living room.

What a dingy old structure it was—one story, low ceilinged, with old fashioned windows and doorway! Outside a swinging sign formed in the shape of a padlock bore the inscription: "Israel Greene, Locksmith, Established 1776."

Israel Greene, patriot colonel, had started in business at the close of the Revolutionary war. Two generations had taken up the business in turn. There was now one living direct descendant, Hector Greene, and it was over him that the old Anthony was worrying.

When the father of Hector had died, Anthony, who had worked with him boy and man for half a century, had stepped into his shoes. Hector did not take to the humdrum, worn out business. The returns from the business and Anthony's honest saving and scraping supported himself and his child and afforded Hector an education. His ambition was to be a mechanical expert, and two years previous he had become one of a corps of young engineers engaged upon the construction of an aerial railroad in the Andes.

He had kissed Millicent good-by, then a blushing lass of sixteen, and had whispered in her ear, "Wait for me, darling!" and later had earnestly remarked to her father: "I love Millicent, and I do not ask that we become engaged for she is young and may change her mind, but when I return I shall ask you to give her to me as my wife."

Old Anthony and his daughter lived comfortably, if savingly. The first year that Hector was in South America he wrote to Millicent regularly once a month. Then he advised her that a great opportunity in some Ecuador silver mines had been afforded him and he was inclined to risk all upon the speculation.

Only twice they heard from Hector during the ensuing six months. Then the United States declared war against its European enemies and Anthony sent a cablegram to Hector, thrilling with the profound patriotism of his intense nature. It read: "Your country needs you, as it did the Greenes in the days of Washington. Come home and do your duty."

There was no reply, Millicent feared that the mandatory message had offended Hector. Two months went by and the absent one sent no word. She concurred with her father in the sentiment that record, tradition, duty should inspire the last of a loyal race with ardor and courage to enter the lists, as his forefathers had done.

Anthony and Millicent were seated in the doorway of the little shop a few evenings later. The old man had heard that Hector had been seen off and on for a month in a neighboring city. He felt himself, and Millicent unjustly neglected. Further, he could not understand why Hector was wasting his time, when every young man who felt the patriotic impulse was rushing to the defense of his country. Suddenly Millicent sprang to her feet with a wild, ringing cry.

"Oh, father—he has come!"

Yes, the street lamp showed a tall, athletic figure wearing a long overcoat and approaching them. It was Hector. "You dear old hero!" he cried to Anthony. "Prettier than ever!" he declared to Millicent, as in turn he grasped the hands of each. He stood erect and manly he looked! But a serious gloom shadowed the face of Anthony.

"Hector," he said, "before we welcome you home, let me show you something," and he pointed to the swinging sign. "'Established 1776' by your great grandfather, who was a colonel in the Revolutionary army. His son won his laurels in the war of 1812. Your father led a forlorn hope at the battle of Pea Ridge in the Civil war. Son of battle that you are, facing a new conflict where your country calls, what have you to say?"

"Why, this!" cried Hector, with shining eyes, and, divesting himself of the enveloping coat, he stood, proud and valiant, in the uniform of a captain in the new American army.

"I have been a month arranging for my commission. It takes me away from you and Millicent—"

"Oh, my hero!" she whispered, and clung to him as he enclosed her in his arms.

Woman Frozen to Ground.

During a cold snap last winter Mrs. John Baker of Downsville took a bucket of hot water and went into the yard to clean the concrete pavement. She splashed the water around and used the broom vigorously, when suddenly she realized she could not move. She made determined efforts to move her feet, and experienced a fearful cold chill as thoughts of paralysis flashed into her mind. She screamed loudly for help, and her husband, who came running, found her shoes were frozen to the pavement.

With a vigorous jerk he yanked her loose, almost pulling her out of her shoes. It was a thankful wife he led into the house to warm her feet.

Fuller's Great Memory.

Thomas Fuller, the author of "The Worthies of England," possessed the useful accomplishment for a clergyman of being able to repeat a sermon verbatim after hearing it only once. Fuller once succeeded in naming backward and forward and without a single omission every shop sign on both sides of the way from Temple Bar to the eastern extremity of Cheapside. This appears a remarkable feat when it is remembered that Fuller lived before the practice of numbering houses was adopted, so that every shop he passed bore a sign.—London Chronicle.

In the province of Sind, India, there are more than 3,513,000 people, and yet there are occasional tigers, panthers, leopards, wolves and hyenas. The gad, or wild sheep, the ibex, the chinker, the black buck and the hog deer are comparatively common.

A Cherished Memento

By VICTOR REDCLIFFE

She sat primly and expectantly on the top porch step, casting anxious glances down the street. Lilias was all dressed up and realized the dignity due for the occasion. She was waiting for a boy she liked, too, and did not want wrinkles to come in her pretty new frock, nor a stray wisp of her flowing hair disarranged until Wallace Doty viewed her, the perfect picture of a dainty fairy that she really was.

Inside the house a clock struck four. The little lady's eyes flashed, a bright pink spot came upon either cheek, she stamped her little foot. Then she flounced down the graveled path leading to the street.

"And he promised to be here at three," she flared forth. "He shan't go with me any more. I'll never speak to a boy again!"

"Oh, Lilias."

A barefooted urchin in a breathless state of excitement patted at the gate. "Heard about Wallace Doty?" he asked.

"No, what about him?" Lilias deigned to inquire.

"He stumped the crowd. Yes sir, he's the first fellow that ever got clear up to the top of Rocky Cliff. And he tore his clothes and nearly rolled into the gully. And his uncle heard of it and walloped him, and then his uncle found that Wallace had broken a new knife he'd got for his birthday and he gave him another walloping, and he's shut Wallace up in his room without a single bite to eat. "Why, what's the matter, Lilias?"

To hide a flood of tears from her informant Lilias dashed back into the house. Once in her room she flung herself upon the bed and huddled up there, regardless of disorder to dress, and hair, sobbing as if her heart would break. Her anger melted as she recognized how unjust she had been. Wallace was a hero. He had done what no one in the village had ever done before, and now he was a martyr. His uncle had always been a harsh man. Wallace was imprisoned, starved, neglected, isolated.

Lilias left her room a strangely subdued yet resolute expression about the set lips. It was just dusk when, a compact parcel under her arm, she proceeded in the direction of the prison house. Inside that package were half a dozen dainty sandwiches, a great slab of pound cake and some apples. Lilias got to the side of the house. She stood directly under an open window.

"Oh, Wallace, it's me," she called softly and a human face peered down. "Wallace, have you a piece of string?" voiced Lilias cautiously.

"Huh! Every boy's got that," responded her hero.

"Then let it down. I've brought you a nice lunch."

"You have? Say, Lilias, I couldn't meet you this afternoon. I'm chained by the ankle to the bed post."

"Oh, cruel! cruel!" wailed pitying Lilias. "Poor Wallace, dear Wallace. I won't sleep all night, worrying about you?"

"Glory! is that so," exulted Wallace. "Then I'll stay awake, too, thinking of you. Lilias, I'm dropping a piece of paper, catch it. There's one of the Cliff four-leaf clovers in it. That's why I made the climb and—"

But Lilias heard someone coming. She pressed the bit of paper tightly in her palm, and when she got home, kissed its enclosure and placed it inside of the locket she wore about her neck.

Two days later Lilias heard some dreadful news. "Dear Lilias," a letter came to the anxious girl, postmarked at a distant city. "I've run away from home, and I'm going to make a man of myself and come back to get you when I'm rich."

Then five years—in all that time Lilias never heard from Wallace, but somehow her childish fancy never dimmed. Then in an instant, despite the change into a full-grown man, joy shone in her face and he seemed unduly happy at her prompt recognition.

It was the day after that when he and Lilias were strolling near Rocky Cliff. But it did not much resemble the wild, inaccessible height of his boyhood days. A summer resort had been established at its base and steps now led up to its apex. They ascended and sat down on the grass to enjoy a marvelous view of valley, dale and meadow.

"How this brings back that day when I vauntingly climbed up here," spoke Wallace. "Do you know how I came to break my knife," he questioned.

She shook her pretty head negatively, but fluttering, for something in his serious, yet glowing eyes told her that he had a purpose in the reminiscence.

"Come with me a few steps," he invited. "Time cannot have obliterated the chronicle," and she accompanied him along a face of rock where he pulled aside some vines. "Ah, here it is," and he exposed an even space bearing some deeply indented letters and words. "I thought that day I might never get back home alive and I scratched on the rock here, those words."

And his companion read plainly across the rock: "I love Lilias Root."

"What do you say, dear," he pressed close at her side.

And shyly and with trembling fingers, Lilias opened the locket at her white throat and showed him the four-leafed clover, cherished faithfully through the years.

Adjustable Support for Broken Limbs.

"Tests of a new limb support which have been made in a hospital in this country have proved so satisfactory that a Red Cross unit will take one of the devices to France, together with specifications for making others, if desired," says Popular Mechanics Magazine. As described and illustrated, it consists of "a hammocklike sling suspended from a steel arm that can be attached either to a bed or a wheel chair. Its special feature is the freedom of movement that is affords the patient. By means of a rope and pulleys the sling can be raised or lowered, while the supporting arm permits it to swing from side to side."

Appropriate.

A family of children, after the usual Saturday night romps, gathered in the drawing-room for music and singing. As bedtime was drawing near the mother said:

"Now, children, choose one hymn to finish up with, and then you must all say 'Good night'."

"Let's have 'Ere Again Our Sabbath Close'," suggested a bright little girl of about seven years of age.

"Well, I think that would be more suitable to-morrow evening," replied the mother.

"Oh, but you always air our Sabbath clothes on Saturday, mummy!" —London Tatler.

HAROLD LITTLEDALE IS HOME ON LEAVE

Former Peterborough Man Has Been at the Front For Nearly Two Years.

NEW YORK, Aug. 20.— Harold A. Littledale, a one-time New York newspaper man, who joined the British army in England two years ago as a member of the King's Liverpool regiment and was later transferred to the Tank Corps, arrived home on a furlough, the first he has had in eighteen months.

"Driving a tank," he said, "beats running a subway train only that there is more rattling than in the New York tubes. Otherwise you are just as much in the dark. You have little peepholes to look through to see that your are on the right way, and the only pleasure I got looking through them was to see the Huns either run away from the tanks like frightened rabbits or to see them topple over from the well aimed shots of our gunners."

The tank driver will recuperate for some weeks at No. 53 Washington square. He went through the German offensive at the Somme last March, and lost two tanks in that struggle. They were not captured, but were so badly battered in the fighting that they had to be abandoned after the battle.

TAKE THE BACK ROADS

Advice to Motorists Who Prefer Not to Eat Dust All Day Long.

There are at least two distinctive classes of motor car drivers. One includes those who desire to get from a given point to another given point in the shortest possible time. The other enjoys motoring because the automobile gives one a chance to see the beauties of nature, to seek out quiet and primitive spots, and to view the country at its best. There is a sharp line between the two. Most of the Monday casualty lists are made up of members of the first. Accidents to the driver who is in no particular hurry are more infrequent.

A man who has driven a car for several years says that one can tell the speed of a car without a device that registers the number of miles an hour. When the car is going twenty or twenty-five miles an hour there is plenty of conversation on the back seat. The occupants point out things of interest and comment thereon. When the speed gets up to thirty-five or forty miles an hour there is less talking, and when a higher mark is attained there is dead silence. Everybody in the car has his eyes glued on the road ahead, and is hopeful that nothing will happen. There is no time and no inclination to talk, even if the rush of air would permit it.

Happily, the average motorist does not drive at an excessive speed, and it is the average motorist who is learning that there are two kinds of highways in Indiana. One kind is the main road between cities, much utilized by speeders—the drivers who watch the speedometer and who brag on what they have been able to "get out of her."

The other kind of driver is learning that there usually is a back road. At this season of the year many of these back roads are in better condition than the main highways. They are smoother and there is less dust. Little traffic is met and the surrounding country, as a rule, is prettier and more pastoral. The man who seeks out these back roads may have to drive a few miles further than if he had kept to the main travelled ways, but the quiet and beauty of the scene more than pay for the extra gasoline.—Indianapolis News.

FRENCH FORCES OPENED NEW OFFENSIWE ON A FRONT OF TEN MILES

Penetrated Enemy Lines for an Average of Two Miles—Whole German Line in Danger.

500 CAPTURED

Canadian Press:

LONDON, Aug. 20.— The French Tenth Army this morning attacked on a front of ten miles between the Oise and the Aisne rivers and penetrated enemy lines for an average depth of two miles, according to despatches received here this afternoon.

This advance of French troops endangers the whole German position at Soissons and on the River Aisne. It is possible that the Germans now will withdraw to the Chemin Des Dames, Before 9 o'clock this morning the French had captured 500 Germans in the sector attacked.

North of Roye the French have taken Bracquemont and Fendu Woods and have occupied the greater part of Beuvraignes, according to advices. It is also reported that they have made progress to the south-east of Beuvraignes.

Yesterday's Attack.

The attack of the French yesterday between Matz and the Oisne was on a front of twelve miles and although the Germans offered stubborn resistance the French made an advance of about a mile. The battle line then ran as follows. Lapravim Farm, which is north-west of Fraeasnieres, Arbede Canny, the western outskirts of Lassigny, Larue Des Boucandes, southern outskirts of Orval, Le Samel, southern outskirts of Dreslincourt and Pimprez. Though the advance was a small one it is regarded as important, as it carried the French line further down the slopes of Lassigny Massiff. The French also moved the Valley of the Oise, being between five and six miles from Noyon.

A Big Wedge.

(United Press.)
(By John De Gandt.)

PARIS, Aug. 20.—General Mangin's army, attacking on a wide front between the Oise and the Aisne this morning, is driving a big wedge deep into the most vital point on the west front. The German positions on the southern end of the Picardy front and the western edge of the Soissons-Rheims front are in danger of being outflanked. The enemy has been forced to withdraw his heavy artillery behind Noyon. The German positions in the Noyon region of the Oise Valley are expected to fall.

All the hills commanding the Aisne and Ailette Valleys have been taken and the Audignicourt ravine has been completely turned.

PTE. NORMAN HARTSHORN.

A Peterboro member of the 93rd Battalion, who was killed in action on August 8th.

Bombarding Entire Region

Allies Have Penetrated Further Towards Roye—Local Fighting

(United Press.)
(By Webb Millar.)

Paris, Aug. 20. — The French continue to consolidate their positions on both sides of the Noyon. They have penetrated further toward Roye and Lassigny, and the latter town virtually has been occupied.

The Germans are furiously bombarding the entire region while the French are shelling Noyon from two directions.

French troops are firmly in possession of the Lassigny and Charlepont Plateau now, the two gateposts of the Oise, and are threatening Noyon.

They are within nine thousand yards (about five miles) of that town, from the south.

General Mangin's artillery is sweeping all this territory except a narrow outlet toward Guiscard (five miles north of Noyon.)

PUBLIC INVITED TO HEAR MR. BANCROFT WEDNESDAY NIGHT

Mr. Fred Bancroft, of Toronto, one of the most prominent figures in organized labour in Canada, will speak at a public meeting in Victoria Hall to-morrow night, under the auspices of the Trades and Labour Council. He will speak on the labour movement in Canada and the problems of the workers, and his broad experience in labour affairs is a guarantee of an interesting address. Mr. Bancroft has been vice-president of the Trades Congress for five years, and twice represented the workers of Canada internationally at conventions of the International Federation of Labour. At the Ottawa convention of the Congress he was chairman of the committee that dealt with the reports presented by the officers. Frequently he has been selected by labour bodies to represent them on boards of arbitration, and at the present time he is a member of the C.G.E. Arbitration Board as the deputy of the employees.

The Labour Council have dispensed with the regular meeting to give the workers of Peterboro an opportunity to hear Mr. Bancroft discuss the questions in which they are deeply concerned to-day, and also the future of the Labour movement. A special invitation is extended to the ladies, and it is hoped that the Wednesday night meeting will attract a large attendance.

Steamer Rammed a Submarine

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

WASHINGTON, D.C., Aug. 20.—The Navy Department announced today that the captain of an American steamer had reported that his vessel rammed and probably sank a submarine about 9.30 p.m. on August 17, near Winter Quarter Shoal, off the Northern Virginia coast. The captain stated the submarine was struck on her port bow bringing her alongside. The submarine crew hailed in strong German accents saying they were friends, the captain said, but he replied they were no friends of his. He kept on his course, he said. The steamer is now in port with a badly damaged bow, and a quantity of water in her hold. The captain thinks he sank the submarine.

SUMMARY OF THE SITUATION ON THE MAIN FIGHTING FRONT

Canadian Press:

LONDON, Aug. 20.—The situation on the main fighting front in France is summed up by Reuter correspondent with French armies as follows: We have arrived at a stage in battle corresponding to that which Germany reached at the end of March and early in June, after long, bloody and exhausting advances on the heels of inferior opposing numbers. We counted firmly on the arrival of the moment when reserves would be able to check the German advance and prepare flank attacks, which have, by their success, restored the initiative to us. The enemy in turn is using that weapon against us. His reserves are not yet exhausted, and however he may grudge the necessity of having to waste them in a defensive battle, which in the end can only be a prelude to a retreat, he may still possess thirty fresh divisions, as well as four hundred thousand youths of the class of 1920. Our successes must be carefully planned and manfully won.

ENEMY ATTACKS AGAINST BRITISH WERE REPULSED

Several Minor Raids Were Carried Out Last Evening—Prisoners Taken.

BRITISH OFFICIAL

Canadian Pres:

LONDON, Aug. 20.—(Official.) — Four German attacks against British positions at Chilly, about six miles north of Roye, were repulsed during the past night. The British lines were advanced in the neighbourhood of Vieux Berquin and Outtersteen, in the Lys salient, which says that 182 of the enemy were made prisoner.

THE STATEMENT READS:

A successful minor operation was carried out by us last evening between Vieux Berquin and Outtersteen to the right of our recent advance in that sector. Our line was brought forward to the neighbourhood of the Vieux Berquin Outtersteen road. Last night the enemy four times attacked posts established by us north-east of Chilly. On each occasion he was repulsed. We successfully raided a German post west of Bray. Our patrols made progress during the night in the area between Lawe and the Lys rivers, and are now east of the Paradis Merville road.

Hartshorn was born in England, but prior to enlisting had resided in Peterborough for a number of years, where he was well known and highly respected.

Coal Shortage Is in Prospect

An extra effort is now being made to speed up shipments of coal on the Great Lakes before the winter sets in. The Ohio operators, who ship most of this coal, will meet with district representatives of the Fuel Administration on Thursday and Friday in Cleveland at which the coal situation with particular reference to lake movements, will be discussed.

There was reciprocal artillery fire in the region of Lassigny and Broslincourt, west of the Oise, the statement says. A German aerial bombardment of Nancy was carried out. Six of the civilian population were killed and a score injured.

Come Down Town To-night Sure

See the Big Display of Dollar Day Values in All the Windows.

Dollar Day in Peterboro is the greatest shoping day in the year. It is an opportunity for the merchants to make a big turn-over of surplus seasonable stocks.

Everyone is aware of the high cost of manufacturing goods of every kind at the persent time, and as Dollar Day permits of big cuts in regular prices of certain staple articles throughout the stores of the city, it behooves all householders if they desire to make savings, to study the advertisements, and see the display of goods in the store windows, to shop to the best advantage.

There never was a Dollar Day in Peterboro with as large a number of stores represented, as for to-morrow's business, and a big busy day is looked for all over town.

TO-NIGHT'S PROGRAM AT EMPIRE THEATRE

Bessie Love in "A Little Sister of Everybody."

In "A Little Sister of Everybody," Bessie Love is a little orphan, who is brought up by her grandfather, an old philosopher who lives in the foreign quarter of a great American city. Seventeen years old, Celeste is a peculiar mixture of affection, shrewdness and womanliness. She plays at housekeeping and is the despair of her scholarly grandfather and the neighbourhood swains, who would come a-wooing if they got half a chance. Celeste mothers everything that comes her way—stray dogs and cats, and unhappy humans. She is the companion and "little pal" of her old grandfather, who worships her.

But there comes a cloud upon the horizon. There are rumblings of anarchists in the air, and men of whom the girl is afraid come to make love to her.

And then enters the young American chap—and our Ceelste escapes her sordid environment and draws up to happiness, with her, those whom she loves.

There is a tense dramatic element in "A Little Sister of Everybody," a sweetly pathetic picture of family loyalty as exhibited in the behaviour and sacrifices of Celeste and a delightfully surprising finish. See it at the Empire Theatre.

ENEMY LOSSES

(By J. F. B. Linesay, Canadian Press Correspondent.)

WITH CANADIAN FORCES, Via London, Aug. 20.—We are now fighting on the old battlefield of the Somme of 1916. It is a difficult country, net-worked with abandoned trenches and wire left by the Boche when he fell back to the Hindenburg Line in the spring of 1917. Whether he intends now to make a determined stand this side of the Somme remains to be seen. His losses, not only of men but of guns and all kinds of material in the Battle of the Marne and the second Battle of Amiens have been so enormous that it is doubtful whether he can undertake anywhere a strong offensive and he has had recently a too ruinous experience of the passive defensive. Captured official documents give some idea of his confusion of mind and proof of his low morale. How different is he spirit of the Canadian force, fully up to stength after ten days of hard fighting, with splendid reserves to draw upon, enriched by many batteries of enemy guns, both heavy and light, and above all, convinced of its invincibility. Here is a story told of a Quebec battalion that won imperishable fame at Courcellette. It was directed to throw out a strong patrol. The officer was wounded and the patrol returned with nine men missing. On the evening of the following day two came in.

"We did not understand the patrol was to retire," they said. "We understood we were to penetrate behind the enemy's lines to his artillery position and here you are," throwing down shoulder strap and cap badge of the German artillery commandant.

A PEN SKETCH OF FORMER RESIDENT OF PETERBORO

A man of mark, not only in his adopted Western province, but in the arena of the Dominion, as Chief Justice Sir Frederick W. G. Haultain, of the Supreme Court of Saskatchewan, chancellor of the University of that Western Province, and for many years Premier and leader of the Conservative party in the North-west, who is for a few days a visitor at the Queen's. English by birth, the son of a famous soldier, Lieut.-Col. F. W. Haultain, R.A., of Woolwich, the jurist-knight of the West came to Canada in boyhood, obtained his earlier education in the public and high schools of Peterboro, and was graduated in arts and the law from the University of Toronto, which later honored one of its sons by conferring upon him the degree of LL.D. at the annual convocation on May 21, 1915—only about six months prior to his knighthood by His Majesty after long and distinguished service to Canada. Admitted to the bar in 1882, he began practice at MacLeod, Alta., in 1884; received the silk in 1902, and during many years played a foremost part in public affairs of the great West, being accounted ten years ago one of the five foremost men of Western Canada. For several years he was Premier of the old Northwest Territories, the administration of which was centralized at Regina. After the erection of the new provinces of mid-West and until his appointment to the bench, he was leader of the Equal Rights Party of Opposition in the Saskatchewan Legislature. His appointment as chief justice was an event of four years ago. On several occasions Sir Frederick has played a part on the federal stage to the extent of being much discussed by the press of Canada. One of these occasions was when he strongly oposed separate schools for Alberta and Saskatchewan when those provinces were erected; another was when, after having endorsed "reciprocity" in 1911, he subsequently revised his opinions on this current issue and opposed the proposed international agreement on which Sir Wilfrid Laurier unsuccessfully sought the support of the Canadian people.

AUSTRIAN DIVISIONS APPEAR ON THE WESTERN FRONT

PTE. JACK SADLER

Mr. George Sadler, 330 Sherbrooke street, has received a telegram from Ottawa this morning, informing him that his son, Pte. John Sadler, No. 195212, Machine Gun Corps, has been admitted to N. 3 Australian General Hospital, Abbeville, France, suffering from a gunshot wound in the right arm, on August 8.

See Necessity for Secrecy

German Disaster on the Marne Partly Due to Methods of the Staff.

(United Press Service.)
(By Lowell Mellet.)

With the British Army in France, August 20. — While events are shaping themselves on the western campaign, and the allied command is following these events (for the possibility of Ludendorff regaining the initiative seems to be growing steadily smaller) the British front continues comparatively quiet.

Nearly 3,000 prisoners were taken in one place or another, the majority of these by the French. The British haul in the neighborhood of Outtesteone this morning totalled 669.

There is no question that the German disaster on the Marne was due partly to the staff's method of advertising its intentions, and allowing the allies time to prepare them.

The cries of "Betrayal!" filling the German press are all the more interesting in view of the recent German army order regarding the necessity for secrecy.

FUNERAL WILL BE HELD TO-MORROW

Body of Gerald Healey Found in a Deep Hole.

The body of Gerald Healey, who was drowned at Inverlea Park yesterday afternoon, was recovered later in the day. The body was discovered by Karl McLean, 431 Stewart street, at the bottom of a deep hole, just where he was seen last. The pulmotor was used in an effort to start him breathing, but it was of no avail; he had been immersed for one and a half hours.

Sergt. Cooper, who is in charge of the bathing facilities at the park, did all in his power to save the boy's life, although that part of the river was outside of his jurisdiction. He dived again and again after the boy about ten minutes after the boy disappeared under the water. Both Bernard Park and Mr. Cooper were thoroughly exhausted when the grappling hooks were resorted to.

Gerald Healey has three brothers, Harold, Fergus and Raymond; and also one sister, Marguerite. The funeral takes place to-morrow morning at 6.40 to Immaculate Conception Church for 7 o'clock Mass, and thence to St. Peter's cemetery.

No inquest will be held.

THE WEATHER

For several nights past the temperature has been dropping a degree or so below that of the previous night. This morning for instance, it was down to 40 degrees, and there was a feeling in the atmosphere that Jack Frost was just around the corner. He usually makes his initial appearance about this date, or a few days later.—W.P.

LIEUT. BROWN IS RECOVERING.

Mrs. P. L. Brown, 527 Sherbrooke Street, received word this morning that her husband, Lieut. P. L. Brown, R.A.F., who was injured on the 13th of August, is doing fine. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Brown, 317 Dalhousie street. He formerly worked in the Bank of Nova Scotia.

Austrian Emperor Agreed to Supply Cannon Food fo Germany—People May Protest.

KARL IS WORRIED

(By Webb Miller.)
(United Press.)

PARIS, Aug. 20.— The serious inroads the Allies' persistent hammering is making into the German reserves which Ludendorff was hoarding for a supreme effort, are shown by two significant facts—the appearance of several Austrian divisions on the western front and a number of boys of the 1919 class among the latest prisoners. The proportion of boys taken in Noyon indicates that practically all of the class of 1919 have been sent to the front.

Reliable reports from Switzerland assert that the recent conference at main headquarters in which the Kaiser and Emperor Karl participated was concerned chiefly with the crisis in man power, resulting from the turn of affairs on the west front. It is reported that Karl agreed to lend Ludendorff 'cannon food' if public opinion would stand the strain. The Germans pointed out that the war would be won or lost on the west front, and that Austria would be beaten there simultaneously with Germany in case the latter was defeated.

Warns Emperor.

Government organs in Austria already are preparing the public for the shock. The National "Zeitung" warns the Emperor against allowing the Germans to use the Austrian army.

"Woe unto Karl if he allows himself to be bullied into sending Austrians into the shambles," the newspaper declares. It will chain his destiny to Ludendorff and will seal the fate of himself and the people forever.

From Vienna it is reported that Karl is worried and doubtful whether the people and the army will submit tamely to going. The Germans are now scraping up every man possible in the back areas for fighting, replacing hitherto men in auxiliary work by girls.

A CO-OPERATIVE TOWN.

The prospectus has just been issued for a new co-operative town to be established in England. We are told that not only the land, as is the garden city at Letchworth, will be owned by the town, but private retail stores will be prohibited, their places being taken by a central store with departments for the sale of most of the goods required in the community. This store will also be the distributing centre for articles produced or manufactured in the town. In fact, every industry is to be run on the co-operative basis, and surplus profits directed to the improvement of working conditions and lowering of prices, or civic improvements, while in every industry, including those controlled by private persons, wages must not fall below the trades unions' standard, full liberty of combination must be permitted, and the workers must be given a share in the management of the undertaking. It is a bright vision, but it yet remains to be seen if a sufficient number of people are to be found ready to back their faith in it with their dollars.—Brantford Expositor.

THE SAME CANADIANS.

General Currie closes another chapter of Canada's record in this war with the following reply to Hon. N. W. Rowell's cabled congratulations. "The victory was the most magnificent which the Old Corps has yet achieved." The first despatches briefly reported our gains, the number of villages retaken and the extent of the advance. In the later news the details began to appear, firing the pride of the Canadian people with the absorbing narrative of exploits that comprise a splendid sequel to the unforgettable chapters that are now history. The old fighting spirit illumines the cold type, the only medium between the homes and the front trenches. It kindles the imagination that strives to visualize the battle scenes the correspondents vividly unfold after the first laconic official statements have been sent home. And the composite impression that remains after the closing of the chapter is one of profound admiration and satisfaction, touched with prayerful gratitude that the traditions of the Canadian Corps have not only been sustained but have also been enhanced by the army that carries on in the fifth year of the war.

With these assuring and inspiring thoughts mingles a memory of the men who, in the first trying years, established those traditions, which in their reflexive effect have gained for Canada a new place among the nations, and have roused her people to a new appreciation of their latent strength and real worth. Many of those eager spirits who filled our first battalions are veterans amongst us to-day. Of them it was said, in the earlier days, as a correspondent wrote of their successes only last Friday—"The better one comes to know the Canadians, the more one realizes the band of brothers they are." The brotherhood in arms survives the wastage and changing personnel at the front, and remains a bond which the Great War Veterans should cherish and safeguard against the disruptive influences that unfortunately prevail at home.

If the returned men have found indifference where they expected a warm appreciation of their sacrifice, of this fact they may be certain that the people who thrilled at the news of their gallant deeds, and who, to-day, unwearied by long watching, are filled with the same emotions by the bravery of the present army, the gratitude of these civilians has not waved. It seeks only an effective and an adequate means of expression which for the present is limited to co-operation with the Veterans in their local endeavours.

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

An advertisement in the Canada Gazette, calling for applications for vacancies in the civil service moves the Kingston Standard to pronounce the patronage system dead. The proof of its passing will be found in the appointments and not in the advertisement, and it is to be hoped that the names of the successful applicants will be given a wider publicity than the Gazette affords. However, this promise of new day, already feebly foreshadowed, in the engaging of civil servants, is a welcome change, though it lacks the approval of Mr. J. H. Burnham. It establishes at Ottawa the business basis of ability to the discomfiture of politicians who rallied "ward heelers" with promises of plunder from the "spoils system."

The Guelph Mercury points out that the reform of the civil service was inaugurated by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and adds—"Sir Robert Borden is entitled to credit for what he has done, but the country is not likely to forget that the departure made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier was a far more risky, and, therefore, a more commendable one."

IMPROVEMENTS AT THE EXHIBITION GROUNDS

How the Money is Being Raised to Meet the Cost of the Much Needed Changes.

Those who visited the grounds of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition on Civic Holiday was much struck with the many changes and improvements that have taken place this summer. That they were necessary everyone will admit. Altogether over four thousand dollars has been spent, and the money on hand after last year's Exhibition was only about $1,200.00. It was due to the generous response of the citizens and manufacturers that $1,500.00 was raised by donations to the improvement account, and $1,000.00 more by the July first and Civic Holiday demonstrations, leaving an overdraft of about $500.00 not yet provided for.

Every Director has contributed at least $10.00 in cash, and some of them more, and they derive no financial gain out of it—only hard work.

The Fund for the improvement of the grounds is open to everybody to subscribe what they feel disposed to Examiner Office, President R. Denne's office or with any of the Directors.

Vacant Lot Gardeners Losing Their Produce

Blood in the Eye of Some of the Victoria Heights Amateurs.

The "Win-the-War Gardens" in Victoria Heights which are just now beginning to give some returns to those working there have been the object of some small boy depredations during the past week.

Several of the lots have had a fairly good crop of tomatoes and two of the men thinking they could get a basket full for the good wife at home to put down for winter use, got the surprise of their lives the other evening. Instead of the expected basket full only two lone ripe tomatoes could be found, the plants themselves had been broken and destroyed and large green fruit was strewn on the ground.

Nothing much was said or done on this occasion but if it ever happens again some boys who have been the cause of the damage are said to be in for more than a good lecture.

COL. GEORGE W. BAIN ADDRESSED LARGE AUDIENCE LAST EVENING

Chautauqua Tent Was Filled to Capacity—The Royal Dragoons Gave a Splendid Performance

The largest audience which has as yet assembled at the Chautauqua, outside of Sunday evening, heard Colonel George W. Bain speak last night on "If I Could Live Life Over Again." Combined with most uplifting ideal set for the young and old, Colonel Bain made a strong appeal for conservation of resources to win the war.

The Royal Dragoons, a singing band composed of nine splendid musicians, gave an excellent programme before Colonel Bain spoke. Their singing and playing made a decided impression upon the audience, who encored them repeatedly.

Euchre Party at Upper Stoney Lake

Prize Went to a Peterborough Visitor.

On Friday evening the Upper Stoney Lake Cottagers' Association held a most enjoyable progressive euchre party of 14 tables at Crowes Landing. Mrs. Canniff carried off the first prize of a box of chocolates, while Mrs. Logan Craig of Grand Valley, received the booby prize of a bottle of catsup and a beet. A programme was given during the evening, contributed to by Miss Norma Mitchell of Toronto, who gave some musical selections, and Mr. Balfour of Toronto, who with some clever slight of hand tricks, kept the audience mystified.

The proceeds of the affair were $18, which will be devoted to Red Cross.

Freshly made jelly really has a finer flavour than that which has stood for a long time.

Linen should be very evenly dampened before ironing and should be ironed until really dry.

It is stated that the definite result will not be made now before to-morrow afternoon.

Weird Reasons Advanced For Increased Consumption of Flour in the Dominion

Consumers are Accused of Shaving Crust Off the Loaf and of Performing Other Atrocities on the Staff of Life.

WRAPPING OF BREAD

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Aug. 20.—In spite of restrictions imposed by the Canada Food Board, in spite of the compulsory use of substitutes, the consumption of flour in Canada for purely domestic purposes has been steadily increasing as indidated by figures prepared by the Labour Department.

For instance it is stated that in May some 7,000 more barrels of flour were consumed than in April. One of the reasons advanced by students of the situation here is the fact that the wrapping of bread has for a considerable time past been prohibited by the Food Board. The wrapping of bread, it is held, not only protected the loaf from insanitary contamination, but served to preserve it for a much longer period than the unwrapped loaf. This, it is contended, would be especially true of the loaf made from standard flour, which in the first place has not the keeping qualities of the old pure flour loaf.

SHAVED OFF CRUST.

It is stated that as a consequence of the order preventing wrapping (which by the way did not add to the price of the loaf) many people shaved off the crust, while others washed the bread, thus further detracting from its keeping qualities.

In fact it would appear that all the saving hoped to be accomplished by the use of substitutes by the criss-crossing of the full covering of pies and by the many other restrictions has been more than counter-acted by the compulsory unwrapping of bread.

SNIPING IS IN PROGRESS IN FISMETTE

Town is Partly Held by Both Sides.

(United Press.)

(By Fred S. Ferguson.)

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, Aug. 20.—Sniping is in progress in Fismette, which is held partly by the Germans and partly by the Americans. There is considerable artillery fighting at intervals, but there are no infantry operations of importance.

BATTLE FOUGHT IN THE STREETS OF RUSSIAN CAPITAL

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, Aug. 20.—Hundreds of people were killed and wounded in a regular battle between Lettish Guards and rioters during food disorders in Petrograd, according to an Amsterdam despatch. The despatch, which quotes Petrograd advices by way of Berlin, says that after the city had been without food for two days, a procession of workmen marched through the streets shouting "down with the Germans, down with the Kremlin." The battle between the rioters and the Lettish Guards occurred before the Smolny Institute. Martial law was proclaimed in Petrograd the same evening.

Troops Landed.

(Special to The Examiner.)

LONDON, Aug. 20. — Japanese troops have landed at Nikolaievsk to protect Allied citizens there, according to an official despatch received from Tien-Tsin to-day.

Nikolaievsk is an important city situated near the mouth of the Amur River, 750 miles north of Vladivostok.

WAR SUMMARY

NEW YORK, Aug 20.— The Associated Press war summary to-day says:

The German forces holding the vital sector of the battle front between the Aisne and the Oise rivers have been hurled back over a ten mile front this morning by the French, according to reports reaching London.

No details of the fighting are as yet available, but the advance of two miles in this sector would seem to place the Germans, both along the Aisne and before Noyon, in a serious position, from which only an immediate retreat would appear to be possible.

THE NEW LINE.

An unofficial despatch also states that the significant local successes have been achieved by the French from the Oise northward to well past Roye. The line as it is traced in despatches, seems to be very close to the important town of Lassigny, for which the French have been fighting for the past week or more. The Germans' hold on Roye also seems to be weakened by the recent progress of the French north and south of the town. It would appear that Roye is now virtually surrounded on three sides.

SMALL LOSSES.

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Aug. 20.— Field Marshal Haig to-day telegraphed to General Headquarters his congratulations on the magnificent success of the British army.

The comparatively small losses the Canadians and other corps are a striking tribute to the skill of their leaders, and the bravery of the individuals is wonderful, Haig said.

World Happenings

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

OTTAWA, Aug. 20.—Long casualty lists this morning publish the names of nearly seven hundred men of the Canadian forces. Of these only two killed in action, sixteen died of wounds, six hundred and sixty-one are wounded, and only one taken prisoner.

SEVERE EXPLOSION.

(Special to The Examiner.)

PARIS, Aug. 20.—A thousand persons were killed or injured in an explosion at the Krupp Works in June, according to letters taken from prisoners captured on the Picardy front, it was learned here to-day.

RETURNED TO-DAY.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 20.—President Wilson returned to Washington this afternoon after his brief vacation on the Massachusetts coast as guest of Col. E. M. House.

GOOD GAME THIS EVENING

Riversides and De Laval Meet—Game With Commercial Travellers Postponed.

The Riversides-De Laval game at Riverside Park to-night at 6.45 promises to be one of the best games of the season as both teams are in good fighting trim, and may decide the League championship.

Game Cancelled.

The game with the Toronto Commercial Travellers, which was to have been played last night, had to be called off owing to five of their players not turning up.

A Return Game.

The Riversides will go to Cobourg to-morrow to play a return game. The players will leave at 3.30.

LINDSAY WANTS RINGSIDE SEAT WITH PETERBORO

If all the clubs that want to play off for the Toronto News Trophy, emblematic of the Ontario amateur baseball championship, are accommodated, the snow will be flying before the winners are determined.

Another application has been received. The Lindsay City League winners want to play in the group with Oshawa and Peterborough.

Baseball Fans Were Disappointed

The baseball fans were disappointed last night when the Commercial Travellers' team failed to turn up. The ground was filling up rapidly, when word was announced that there would be no game. Five of the travellers missed their train at Toronto, and thus killed the game in the city. The game has been definitely called off by the management of the Riverside team.

POSTMEN NOT ELATED OVER SALARY RAISE

The Peterboro letter carriers were non-committal this afternoon, when asked for an opinion of the Government's provisional award of an increase of $100 in salaries. They decided to withhold their statement until they had received an official announcement from their General Secretary, Mr. Alex. McMordie of Toronto. But they were not throwing their hats in the air or preparing a resolution of thanks to be sent to the Hon. Mr. Carvell. One hundred dollars was better than nothing, but it fell considerably short of the sum demanded at the time of their strike. Moreover the grant is only a provisional one. The men had asked for a minimum salary of $1200 and a maximum of $1400.

WAS A NEPHEW OF MR. J. H. BURNHAM

Among the latest casualty list of those killed in action appears the name of Major Sidney Smith Burnham, D.S.O., eldest son of Dr. and Mrs. G. H. Burnham, 128 Bloor street, Toronto. Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., is an uncle of the deceased. Major Burnham went overseas as a lieutenant in September, 1915, and has had a brilliant military career. In October, 1917, he was attached to the General Staff.

DISTRIBUTION OF LABOUR, QUESTION BEFORE ARBITERS

The question of distribution of labour in periods of industrial depression was involved in this afternoon's session of the Board of Arbitration which is nearing the claims of groups of the C.G.E. employees in their differences with the company. This morning the Board held an executive session at the Empress Hotel when the points already deliberated were reviewed.

One of the first points taken up this afternoon was the demand of the men that before any employees in the machine, brass, tool making and electrical working departments are discharged in times of slackness that the working hours be reduced to from nine to eight for a week of five days.

Temporary Conditions.

Judge Snider, the chairman of the Board, pointed out that that this clause was based on possible temporary conditions, and the question arose as to when these conditions would exist.

It was pointed out in reply that these periods would be readily recognied.

Judge Snider—Would there be an automatic reversion to the nine-hour day.

Mr. F. H. Harper—Certainly that is already provided.

Judge Snider—But the last clause is generally the governing one.

Mr. Merrick, the company's representative on the Board suggested to Mr. Harper that instead of presenting this clause as mandatory that it merely be a recommendation to the firm.

Mr. Harper refused to agree to this proposal.

In Firm's Interest.

Col. Watt speaking for the company stated that it was in the firm's interest to retain their employees as long as possible, and slack times this emergent practice was adopted. At the same time he declared that this claim "would lead to all sorts of arguments."

Mr. Patterson recalled that in 1914 the company had distributed labour as suggested in this claim.

"At that time it was practically universal. Employers tried to give all their men some work; Mr. Merrick said.

Mr. Bancroft —Well what is the objection now?

Mr. Harper—It seems that it would be establishing a precedent in writing.

From that question discussion moved to the consideration of apprentices, especially their proportion to the number of machinists. The men ask for a ratio of one to five. Another point taken up was the remand that "specialists" shall not be employed on machinists work. Specialists is a term used by the men; the company designates such employers of handymen.

At clause 14 Judge Snider remarked that the board was trying to discover the points upon which the company and the men were agreed.

CATTLE MARKET

Receipts yesterday were 19 cars, with 262 cattle, 78 calves, 257 hogs, and 225 sheep and lambs.

This constitutes a comparatively light run for a Tuesday. Prices, however, held steady in all branches of the market, excepting in the hog yards, and sheep houses. Some of the packers on the market were disposed to pay a higher price for lambs with the result that the few head on sale were forced from fifty cents to a dollar per hundred weight higher.

The second exception to steady prices was a clear drop of 75 cents in hogs, fed and watered, which sold yesterday at $19.50. The reason for this welcome decline is attributed to the apathetic feeling among the buyers of the big packing houses which is always displayed in the face of a small market. "Not enough to bother about" is their frame of mind. And as the stuff must be sold it goes cheaper, because uncompeted for.

Choice cattle continue to be scarce and in demand. The best price paid for cattle after three hours of trading yesterday was $13.50.

Art and Children.

"What has art done for children?" This question was recently put to Walter Crane, the English illustrator, who has done so much to educate the childish eye for the beautiful.

"When we began to work and inaugurated the change from the dry little wood cuts and too often crude and vulgar illustrations and made as beautiful picture books as we could for children," said Mr. Crane, "we simply followed our personal tastes and delights, working as artists, and we thought chiefly of giving pleasure to ourselves and the children and not of any theoretic good that might accrue to them in after years as a result of what we did.

"Picture books are a necessity, especially to children. They think in pictures instead of in words and learn from them too. Drawing to a child is a language. Every teacher should be able to draw so that he can illustrate his meaning to his young pupils in the way they understand best. And children should be encouraged and taught to draw before they are taught [illegible]."

Overzealous.

If you have ever been annoyed by a too enterprising barber you will appreciate the little incident that left one of them rueful and crestfallen the other day.

Having shaved the customer, he ran his hand over the man's head and said insinuatingly:

"Have a hair trim to-day, sir?"

"Do you think I need it?"

"Yes; it looks pretty long."

"Well, how is the boss barber on hair trimming? Is he pretty good?"

"Yes; he's pretty good, all right. But why?"

"Well, he trimmed my hair yesterday."

Sub-Committee of Privy Council Makes Its Report, Which Becomes Effective at Once

Ottawa, August 20. — The sub-committee of the Privy Council which recently heard the representations of the letter carriers, railway mail clerks and postal clerks of the Postal Service of Canada for increases in salary has made its report, which was adopted yesterday by the government, and consequently goes into effect at once.

The principal recommendation in the report is that in addition to all salaries and allowances voted by Parliament and now payable, there shall be paid a further provisional allowance for the current fiscal year, and as from April 1, 1918, of $100 to employees east of Sault Ste. Marie, and $50 to those at and west of Sault Ste. Marie. For many years western employees have received a special living allowance of $180 over those of those of the East, and this has been taken into consideration by the committee. At the hearings the view was strongly expressed to the committee that this differential was not justified under the present conditions. The present salaries of those affected by the increases and the salaries which they will now receive are shown in the following schedule:

	Total previous income.	Total income as increased
In Eastern Canada—
Minimum	$ 876	$ 976
Maximum	1189	1289
In Western Canada—
Minimum	1056	1106
Maximum	1369	1419
RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS.
In Eastern Canada—
Minimum	850	950
Maximum	1600	1700
In Western Canada—
Minimum	1030	1080
Maximum	1780	1830
POSTAL CLERKS.
In Eastern Canada—
Minimum	850	950
Maximum	1880	1880
In Western Canada—
Minimum	1030	1080
Maximum	1880	1880

It is provided that the above additional provisional allowance shall not be paid in excess of the proportion which together with any salary or provisional allowance now payable to any employee, shall constitute a salary of $1880.

Another important recommendation of the committee is that the limitations contained in the vote of Parliament, which confined the provisional allowance which was voted to certain employees of the department to married men, widowers and widows with children, and to unmarried persons with dependents and permanently employed, be now removed. The result is that temporary employees, as well as permanent and unmarried persons, without dependents of the classes mentioned, will now be entitled to such provisional allowance as the vote provides. The provision for the deduction from this provisional allowance of any permanent increase in salary given since April 1, 1918, is also eliminated.

The committee also recommends that all provisional allowances, including that which they recommend, be payable in proportionate instalments with the usual salary cheques to those entitled thereto.

PEARCE LIKE TO HAVE SUFFOCATED

Gas Forming Around Heart at Times Nearly Took His Breath.

"I have never taken any medicine that helped me as much as Tanlac, for it certainly entirely relieved my stomach trouble after everything else had failed to do me any good," said William Pearce, who is employed by the Grand Trunk Railway, and lives at 38 St. Patrick St., Toronto, the other day.

"More than a year ago," he continued, "when my health failed I lost my appetite, my stomach went right back on me and gave me no end of trouble. My food would sour every time right after eating and fill me up so with gas that I would be in misery for hours afterwards. I was constantly belching up gas and bitter water, and at times there was such a terrible pressure up around my heart that I nearly suffocated. I was badly constipated and suffered so much from dull, mean headaches, that I was constantly taking pills and other preparations for it, but got no relief. My food did not nourish me a bit, for I lost fifteen pounds and had so little life and energy that I could not work regularly. I got steadily worse and finally went to the hospital for treatment, but after being there for three months I came out just as bad off as before. Then I was advised to have my teeth extracted, so I had every one taken out, but still got no better. It is simply going through with all this and I almost despaired of ever getting well again.

"But I did not give up hope entirely, for when I read about Tanlac helping so many others who were in my fix, I decided to give it a trial. I have taken only three bottles so far, and it has certainly straightened me out all right. I have a splendid appetite now, can eat anything I want and am never troubled with gas or indigestion at all. My constipation has been entirely removed, I never have a headache, that feeling of depression and sluggishness has disappeared, and I am in better condition than I have been in for more than a year. I think Tanlac is the best medicine made, and I am glad to tell everybody how it has completely restored my health."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co. Ltd.; in Havelock by A. C. Denike; in Lakefield by Tanner Drug Co. Ltd.; in Fowler's Corners by W. A. Hunter; in Gelert by A. J. Scott; in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

Lakefield Soldiers Appreciate Socks

Letters of Acknowledgment Received by Soldiers' News Club

LAKEFIELD, Aug. 20. — The Soldiers' News Club of Lakefield have received the two following letters of appreciation of their gifts of maple sugar to Lakefield boys overseas. A large number of other letters have come and some will be published later. The following letter is from Pte. Fred Graham, a former Lakefield boy and prominent hockey player:

To the Ladeis of the Soldiers' News Club.—Received your parcel of maple sugar and it was sure a treat to get some maple sugar, for we never see any over here and chocolates are very scarce, and a person sure appreciates some eats from home. The girls' names on the card are some of my school mates and I was certainly taken by surprise when I got it. We received it the 15th of July, so it sure came in a hurry, and it was nice, and I certainly enjoyed it, as it is over seven months since I had some real Canadian maple sugar.

We go on our last leave next Tuesday before we go to France. Most of the boys that came over with me have already gone to France, so I guess it won't be long till we go over, and we will all be glad to go. We are filled up on training. I was very sorry to hear the sad news about Roland Carter being killed and Vandal Simpson being gassed and shell-shocked. If I knew what hospital he was in I would try to go to see him. Now as news is very scarce and not very much to tell, thanking the ladies of the Soldiers' News Club once more, I remains, a Lakefield boy—

Pte. Fred Graham.

Remember me to all the friends

The following letter is from Capt. (Dr.) M. R. Graham, of the C.A.M.C.:

No. 7 Can General Hospital,
B. E. F., France.
July 15th, 1918.

The Soldiers' News Club,
Lakefield, Ontario.

Dear Friends,—A few days ago I received your nice parcel of maple sugar. It went to my battalion, but followed me here. I must say I enjoy maple sugar very much, in fact better than any chocolates.

At present we are not busy in this hospital. For a while we treated a great many Spanish influenza cases, as they were called, which developed into pneumonia.

Sometimes Fritz disturbs our nightly slumbers, especially when the moon is bright. I feel certain most of us could qualify for a fireman's job after the war, especially on account of the rapidity with which we can dress when the alarm goes.

When I look over the list of names in your News Club I begin to wonder will I know all you young ladies when I get back to Lakefield. Anyway if I don't happen to recognize you, I want you to come and speak to me and I will be quite pleased and glad to have the pleasure of thanking you personally for your kind remembrance.

I sincerely hope the mighty struggle will soon be over and all our boys will go back home, where there is peace and quietness.

With best wishes to you all.

Yours sincerely,
M. R. Graham, Capt.,
C.A.M.C.

Curious Jellyfish.

A retired mariner says he saw many strange inhabitants of the sea when he was going about the world in a square rigger, but a sight which impressed him most was the peculiar form of a jellyfish. It was about eight inches long and shaped precisely like a horse, having a long, flowing mane, fetlocks and the various other appurtenances.

What sailors call "Portuguese men of war" are jellyfish shaped like a boat. Each carries large sail, resembling isinglass, which bellies out with the wind and causes the fish to cut through the water at a surprising speed. The "Portuguese men of war" are numerous in the Indian ocean.

He Hits Back.

There had been a domestic spat at breakfast.

"You monster!" snapped the matron, who was always scolding. "You are not like my two former husbands. They were tender men."

"I never doubted that they were tender, Maria," ventured the meek man, "when you kept them in hot water all the time." And he just cleared the front porch two yards ahead of the rolling pin that followed him.

Fatal Disease.

A young painter who had just finished a picture insisted upon a friend calling to see it.

"There, now," enthused the artist, "you see my new picture! What's the matter with that?"

"I don't know," replied the bored friend, "but I should say it was a case of art failure."

Charred Bodies Found in Ruins; Evidence of Murder.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Aug. 20. — The charred bodies of Philip Roth, his wife and five children were found in the ruins of their home 12 miles east of Willseyville, Tioga County, Saturday. The house, which was located in a remote section of the County, had been burned during the night. An investigation conducted Sunday by Coroner Holly, of Candor, District Attorney Beck and Sheriff Bixby, of Oswego, led to the discovery of a shot gun on the floor of the room in which the bodies were found and a bullet hole in the skull of one of the victims gave evidence that all may have been murdered and the house fired to conceal the crime.

The Woman Who Changed

By JANE PHELPS

MOTHERHOOD

CHAPTER CXLIX

For the next two years my life went on in about the same way. I continually tried to improve myself, to make of myself a well-rounded woman. It is wonderful what one can accomplish with determination I kept up my music, even studied harder than ever I had before, as it was one of the means of keeping George at home. He had not changed in regard to remaining out, or rather in going out evenings. Seldom did he remain at home unless we were entertaining. But I no longer worried either him or myself about it. I had made up my mind I could not change him in that regard. He would not have his liberty curtailed, his goings and comings questioned now, any more than when we were first married. But he also never questioned me. Not that it was necessary. I was only too glad to have him listen while I recounted all I had done; where I had been, and with whom.

When Kenneth was three years old, my twin boys were born. George was delighted, and so was I. I fairly gloated over my babies. They were strong, brigth little fellows, and looked amazingly like their father even when tiny.

We had a nursery fitted up on the third floor, a young girl installed to help Lena, the nurse who had been with us ever since Kenneth was born, and once again George and I were able to go about together.

A Visit to Chicago.

One afternoon George came home very early. I knew something unusual had brought him, but waited for him to tell me what it was.

"Would you like to go to Chicago? I must go. Had a wire from Babcock. He said Mrs. Babcock wanted you to come along."

"Oh, I'd love to go—but the babies." They were four months old, but I never had been away from them.

"They will be all right. Lena is perfectly capable of taking care of them and it will do you good. But you must decide at once. I must catch the night train."

I think if I had had time to think I should have hesitated much longer; perhaps refused altogether to go, and so missed one of the most pleasurable experiences of my life. But I had to tell him at once. I called Lena in and asked her if she felt able to care for the boys.

"Yes ma'am. You go right along. With Katie to help I shall get along all right. Then Annie too is so nice with Kenneth."

"Yes, I'll tell her to help you all she can. You will have your hands full with Ted and Bob." We had named the twins Edward and Robert. George had insisted that his boys have good substantial names.

"It is too much of a handicap to a boy when he has to go thru life as an Algernon, or a Claude," he had said when I rather objected to Edward and Robert as being common sort of names, and suggested Paul and one or two others.

"All right dear. When I have a girl don't you dare interfere I had replied laughingly, and he had promised that he wouldn't.

"No, should any girls come our way you can name them whatever you please. But my boys must be manly fellows, and it's hard to be manly with a girlish or silly name."

Helen Worries Over the Children

I was so rushed getting off that I scarcely had time to worry. But no sooner were we on the train than I commenced.

"You think they will be all right, George?" he was reading the evening paper and I had interrupted him.

"Yes."

I waited a minute, then:

"Suppose they should get sick. I never should forgive myself for coming away."

"They won't—no more apt to than if you were at home."

"Really you feel that way?"

"Um."

I waited perhaps ten minutes. Then once more I spoke:

"I hope if they are sick Lena will do as I told her and telegraph us. I never should forgive myself"—I repeated when George interrupted:

"I never shall forgive you if you don't keep still and let me read this paper. I have read, or tried to, one article at least five times and don't know yet what it is about, thanks to you."

This time I kept still for a longer period. But the babies were so on my mind that when I had looked out of the window a bit, then around the car I again said:

"I hope Annie will remember to send for Doctor Marvin if they should get croupy or anything. I told her to, but servants are so neglectful."

"For Heaven's sake Helen do keep still I'll go in the smoker where I can read in peace," and without giving me an opportunity to reply he left me.

To-morrow—In Chicago.

SUFFERED TWO YEARS WITH PIMPLES

Child Could Not Sleep Till Cuticura Healed.

"My little brother suffered for about two years from tiny red pimples. They appeared constantly on his body but he had the greatest trouble under his ears. The skin was red and very sore and at the least touch he would give a howl of pain. After a few seconds he would have to scratch, and he was not able to sleep.

"A friend advised me to send for Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I noticed a change, and I used three cakes of Cuticura Soap and four boxes of Ointment when he was healed." (Signed) Louis Frank, 746 City Hall Ave., Montreal, Que., February 2, 1918.

FAVOURS SELF-GOVT. FOR UNITED IRELAND.

Declaration of Lord Chancellor of Ireland Causes Political Sensation.

London, August 20.—Political circles have been given quite a sensation by a declaration by Sir James H. M. Campbell, Lord Chancellor of Ireland, that he is favour of "self-government for a united Ireland." This statement was made by him at a luncheon in Dublin on Saturday.

When Sir James was appointed Lord Chancellor in succession to Sir Ignatius John O'Brien in June, it was believed that the action of the government menat reversal of its Irish policy. His speech, however, proves that he is a convert to Home Rule, according to Liberal commentators. Sir James is quoted as follows:

"From the day the war broke out I determined regardless of my commitments in the past, and the views of my old political colleagues, that I should endeavor to the best of my ability to bring about a solution, by consent, of the Irish problem on the only lines which it seemed to me held any promise of success—I mean self-government for united Ireland."

Through the Coal Shortage

By GEORGE VIX

(Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

In the nice warm days of June the idea of rooming and preparing her own meals had appealed to Ethel Storey, so she rented a two-roomed apartment and established her little household. It was an airy place and all summer she enjoyed it, but when the cold weather came on she found that she had a problem before her. The only means of heating the rooms was from a little coal stove, and when one doesn't understand the management of a coal stove and is dependent upon it, there is trouble ahead. But Ethel learned to manage it at last and would have been fairly comfortable all winter had not the coal shortage come on.

The dealer from whom she had been getting the coal announced that they were sold clean out and there was none to be procured.

For a week she managed to get along by burning charcoal, but when she came to figure up accounts at the end of the week she found that the charcoal was costing her nearly as much as she earned. She would have to try something else, she told herself, and then she remembered the old tree in the back yard, that had been blown down in the big storm that had caused the railways to be tied up and had mainly been the cause of the inability of the roads to carry through coal to supply the consumers. The tree most likely belonged to the city, but it would be just as cheap to pay a fine as to burn charcoal, she reasoned, as she put on her coat and armed herself with a hammer to begin work, converting the maple into firewood.

After nearly five minutes' hard labor she decided that a hammer wasn't a very good substitute for an ax. "Can't I help you?" Ethel heard someone say, and looked up to see Leo Delaney, who occupied the front suite on the first floor, smiling down at her.

"Oh, Mr. Delaney, I'm trying to chop firewood," she explained with a laugh as she attempted to straighten her hair. "I haven't a bit of coal and I won't be able to get any for some time. This tree just simply refuses to break up."

"It is too green to burn, anyway," he said, as he examined the wood. "However, if it would burn you wouldn't be able to chop enough with that hammer to last ten minutes."

"What am I going to do?" she asked in perplexity. "I'll have to move some place else where the heating is looked after."

"It would be a pity to have you do that. I have plenty of coal and I could let you have some until a supply comes to the city."

"But it will run you short."

"No, it won't. The firm that I work for keeps me supplied with coal. I am specially privileged."

"They would not care to have you give it to me," she said dubiously.

"They wouldn't miss a little bit like that, and besides I have a right to it."

Ethel did not ask him to explain his right, but she felt that if he said so it would be all right to accept the coal. He kept her fire well supplied after that and many a time when he carried a scuttle up the stairs to her, he stayed to chat.

The little coal that did come to the city was soon distributed and could not be sold to consumers in less than quarter-ton lots, so as the weeks went by Leo was still keeping Ethel supplied. One evening she came home and found that her scuttle was empty and the fire low. She waited for Leo to appear for nearly half an hour and then went to the first floor in search of him. There was no response to her rap on the door of his suite. She picked up the evening paper which she had brought with her.

"Railroad Man Arrested for Coal Theft," was the first heading she saw. As she read the story her excitement rose to fever heat. An employee of the railway had been arrested for taking coal to his home for consumption. So that was where Leo had got the coal. She wouldn't let him suffer alone. She would go and give herself up as an accomplice.

She had her hat and coat on when she heard someone coming up the stairs. She gave a gasp of joy when Leo stood in the doorway.

"Why, you have been crying and look so excited and worn out," he exclaimed as he caught sight of her. "What has happened, Ethel?"

"I thought you were arrested," she choked, for the tears wouldn't stop.

"Arrested? For what?"

She showed him the paper.

"Isn't it strange that you thought that was me?" he said. "I've just been down getting that poor fellow off. My father is president of the road, so I didn't have any trouble getting the case dismissed; you couldn't blame him for stealing it in this awful weather, could you?"

"I should say I couldn't. Perhaps he was stealing it for the girl he loved."

"Who wouldn't?" he laughed. "I would have helped myself to it if I couldn't have got it any other way for you, for you are the girl I love. Today I have been the means of averting a strike, I think, and I know dad will be proud of it. All that I need to make me truly happy is to present you to him as my future wife."

"I want you to be truly happy," she said, as she held out her hands to him.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

IN 4-D

By MAUNA COWLES

(Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Tenant in apartment Four D, Marbridge court," whispered vociferous Nathan, the young man who worked the switchboard at Curtis & Carter's real estate offices. The young man listened to the voice on the telephone, then turning to the young Mr. Carter, he said: "She wants to talk to one of the firm. Kind o' mad, I should say. Want to talk to her, Mr. Carter?"

"What's she like?" queried the youngest member of the firm.

"Sounds like a cranky old school ma'am. She's awful mad—"

"Oh, well, I might as well talk to her. I'll kid her a little, and maybe that will keep her quiet," and still turning over the papers on his desk, with his right hand, Mr. Carter reached out with his left hand to take the receiver off its hook on his desk phone while the operator connected him with the tenant in apartment Four D.

"So you're pretty cold. Well, now—I didn't catch the name—Miss Crosby—I certainly am sorry. But you'll have to see Mr. Hoover about that. Now, you don't think we're keeping that apartment cold just to make you mad. No, honest, there isn't any way we can get more coal. What—the theaters get coal enough. Well, that's a good one. All you can do, then, is to go to a show. It's matinee day. Now, really, I didn't mean to make you angry. But you see, everyone is kicking, and it really isn't our fault. We can't get any more coal and all we can do is to try and keep cheerful about it. What? You bet that it isn't so cold here in our office as it is in your apartment? Well, now, Miss Crosby, I'll have to admit that it is pretty comfortable here. We've got a southern exposure and we're on the ground floor, and somehow these office building people do manage to get the coal. Yes, it is unfair. What? Why, certainly. I'd be glad to see you. Come right along. Yes, just ask for Mr. Carter, Jr., Frank Carter. Good-by, Miss Crosby. I'll see you soon." He hung the receiver back on the hook and then clapped his hand over the ear with which he had been listening as if to relieve it from the effect of the volley fire that had been charged on it through the phone.

"Wow," he said, addressing the telephone operator on the opposite side of the room, beyond the little wooden fence. "Wow, but she certainly is some sour old maid. I thought I'd kid her into good humor, but it was the wrong tack. I wonder if she'll call my bluff and come down and see how warm we are. But say, Nathan, try to get the coal commissioner on the wire again. It's a shame to run the fires so low. Ask them if they can't let me speak to him personally. It seems as if something ought to be done."

A half-hour later young Carter heard a very low but unmistakable whistle. It was Nathan's way of indicating that something worth observing was occurring in the office. There was a note of admiration in the whistle—distinctly it was his way of signaling to the other boys in the office and Mr. Carter, who was still young enough to be interested in such a signal even though he was a member of the firm—the proximity of a pretty girl.

Carter looked up from his paper, caught the direction of Nathan's gaze and then whistled an answering whistle, very low, but still audible to Nathan. It was a pretty girl and she was approaching in the vicinity of Nathan. Enveloped in a voluminous fur-trimmed rough woolen coat of a dark violet hue, with her hands encased in a black muff to match the fur on her coat, with a picturesque black velvet hat, cut on the poke bonnet order, that cast much shadow on her face, there was still enough opportunity to see that the girl beneath so much warmth-giving clothes was young, animated and pretty.

The bewildered Nathan looked up as she approached and to her query that Carter did not hear, he nodded to the desk of the youngest member of the firm. Then the violet coat and the delicate aroma of violet sachet that went with it moved toward the little wooden fence that hedged in Mr. Carter's desk.

"Here I am," said the girl. "I'm the tenant in Four D., Marbridge court. Where do you want me to sit—inside the fence or outside?"

Carter jumped from his seat and was so confused that all he could say was: "Inside the fence—please take this chair, any chair, any chair. Yes, indeed. You—are actually Miss Crosby? How very good of you."

"No, I won't take your chair. I'll take this little one," she said, slipping out of her coat and revealing a very neatly fitted plain blue serge dress beneath. She placed the chair precisely half way between the radiator and the window where the light would come over her left shoulder. "There," she said. "I like it just like that. I shall knit and not disturb you at all. Please sit down, Mr. Carter. You can't imagine what a pleasure it is to be warm."

Carter noted a tone of asperity in the girl's voice but he did not feel in the least irritated by it. He tried to swing himself around in his swivel chair so that he could go on with the work before him, but the chair seemed to swing of its own accord around again so that he sat looking at his guest.

"So—so you took my invitation seriously, did you? I'm glad." He laughed with embarrassment and the girl opened two blue eyes wide and round, with studied naivety, behind which Carter knew lay much sarcasm. "Why, didn't you mean that you wanted me to come?" she asked. "You first suggested the theater, but you see, I've been at the theater till I've seen every show in town and every movie in the neighborhood. And I simply must get those army sweaters done!" Carter noticed that she had taken a half finished khaki sweater from her bag.

Even to his inexperienced eyes the knitting seemed wonderfully firm, warm and compact and he noted the gold ends of the knitting needles.

"I've called on all my friends. You see I don't know many people in town, and I've shopped till I've bought a trunkful of things I don't need. I've spent hours in church and other hours in the museum and the public libraries. So your invitation was very welcome. Perhaps if I had always lived in the North I could stand the apartment. But you see this is my first winter North. I came with my aunt and now she has gone away for a few weeks and I'm alone. One feels the cold more when one is alone, I think." Then promising not to disturb Mr. Carter any more she continued her knitting in silence. From time to time when Mr. Carter felt that her eyes were intent on her knitting he swung around in his swivel chair and caught a timid glance at the girl. Sometimes he noticed the graceful ankle, at other times the slender capable hands that were so neatly framed in the tight white lace cuffs of her dark sleeves. At other times he noticed the glint of auburn in her hair and then again the long curve of the dark lashes that shaded her blue eyes. He did not know that from beneath those long lashes the blue eyes were perfectly capable of observing his stolen glances though the graceful fingers went on uninterruptedly with the needles and wool.

"Couldn't you give me a job?" Nancy Crosby put this question to Mr. Carter one day after she had been making her visits to his office for the purpose of keeping warm during the course of an entire week. "I am getting tired of knitting. One can't do that all the time. I could do copying for you and sort over papers perhaps and stick up envelopes and stamps and things."

So Mr. Carter secured a little mahogany desk, had it placed beside his own and there established Nancy Crosby as his volunteer assistant. They had finally agreed that the money that she earned as his assistant should be contributed to the Red Cross.

It was in the afternoon of that day that Mr. Carter dropped in at the Marbridge Court and getting the emergency key to apartment Four D from the janitor there let himself into the empty apartment and did a little amateur tinkering on his own account. That morning through his incessant efforts a goodly supply of coal had been deposited in the coal bins of the Marbridge Court.

Nancy Crosby continued to work for him for a week more. He asked her one day whether her apartment was still cold. "Yes," she said, "it really is dreadful. There isn't any steam in the living room radiator, though the bedroom radiators are all right. But you see I can't stay there in the day time. Isn't it strange, for the other tenants are perfectly comfortable now."

"Yes, it is funny," agreed Carter, and began to read a lease on his desk with eagerness.

At the end of that week Nancy's aunt was expected to return and Nancy had indicated that she would have to give up her job.

"I took it just to be spiteful. In fact, I came down to bother you, just to make you furious. I thought you were holding off the steam so as to save money and I intended to find out and to make you so tired of seeing me around that you would get the coal at any cost. But really I have had a lovely time. Thank you for making it so pleasant. But now that aunt is coming back I really wish something could be done about that apartment."

"I'll go up myself," Carter promised. "Maybe something is the matter with the living room radiator. I'll have it attended to at once. But—but—we aren't going to forget each other now, are we? You see, I've been getting terrifically interested in you, though I suppose to you I'm an impossible sort of fellow."

"Impossible!" echoed Nancy. "You don't suppose I would have fibbed about the radiator if I hadn't wanted an excuse to be with you. I haven't even noticed whether it was hot or cold."

"You haven't," gasped Carter. "And I put the valve out of commission in your living room."

I feel better and stronger in every way since taking it, and the annoying symptoms have disappeared." — Mrs. M. GODDEN, 925 Napoleon St., Fremont, Ohio.

NUXATED IRON

To help make strong, keen, red-blooded Americans there is nothing in my experience which I have found so valuable as organic iron—Nuxated Iron," says Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital. Nuxated iron often increases the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down people in two weeks' time. It is now being used by over three million people annually, including such men as Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, former Secretary of the Treasury, and ex-Governor of Iowa; former United States Senator Richard Bullard Kenney of Delaware, at present Major of the U. S. Army; General John T. Clem (Retired), the drummer boy of Shiloh, who was sergeant in the U. S. Army when only 12 years of age; also United States Judge G. W. Atkinson of the Court of Claims of Washington and others. Nuxated Iron is dispensed by all good druggists everywhere.

Family Well Represented in War.

Practically all the members of the family of Henry Phipps, pioneer steel man and millionaire philanthropist, have been called into war service.

Of his sons, John S. Phipps is a captain in the aviation division of the United States Signal corps; Hal C. Phipps is a captain in the ordnance department at Washington, and Howard Phipps is preparing for a commission in the regular army. Mrs. Amy Phipps Guest, a daughter, has converted her palatial London home into a hospital. Frederick Guest, husband of Mrs. Guest, is a captain in the British army, and Bradley Martin, Jr., husband of Helen Phipps, is a major in the United States army.

Sable Skins.

The costliest sable is the Yakutsk (Russian) skin that runs "silvery"—that has, in other words, a number of equally distributed white or silvery hairs among the soft and silky brown ones. Such skins, of the average size of 15 by 5 inches, are worth $750 apiece. "Topped" sables are dyed ones. They fetch $50 a skin.

Bonaparte said France was not large enough for himself and Mme. de Staël at the same time and exiled her. Next to Bonaparte she was, through her salons, the most powerful personage in the country in her time. "If I were empress of the world," exclaimed the brilliant Mme. de Tesse, "I would command Mme. de Staël to talk to me forever."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

IN 4-D

By MAUNA COWLES

(Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Tenant in apartment Four D, Marbridge court," whispered vociferous Nathan, the young man who worked the switchboard at Curtis & Carter's real estate offices. The young man listened to the voice on the telephone, then turning to the young Mr. Carter, he said: "She wants to talk to one of the firm. Kind o' mad, I should say. Want to talk to her, Mr. Carter?"

"What's she like?" queried the youngest member of the firm.

"Sounds like a cranky old school ma'am. She's awful mad—"

"Oh, well, I might as well talk to her. I'll kid her a little, and maybe that will keep her quiet," and still turning over the papers on his desk, with his right hand, Mr. Carter reached out with his left hand to take the receiver off its hook on his desk phone while the operator connected him with the tenant in apartment Four D.

"So you're pretty cold. Well, now—I didn't catch the name—Miss Crosby—I certainly am sorry. But you'll have to see Mr. Hoover about that. Now, you don't think we're keeping that apartment cold just to make you mad. No, honest, there isn't any way we can get more coal. What—the theaters get coal enough. Well, that's a good one. All you can do, then, is to go to a show. It's matinee day. Now, really, I didn't mean to make you angry. But you see, everyone is kicking, and it really isn't our fault. We can't get any more coal and all we can do is to try and keep cheerful about it. What? You bet that it isn't so cold here in our office as it is in your apartment? Well, now, Miss Crosby, I'll have to admit that it is pretty comfortable here. We've got a southern exposure and we're on the ground floor, and somehow these office building people do manage to get the coal. Yes, it is unfair. What? Why, certainly. I'd be glad to see you. Come right along. Yes, just ask for Mr. Carter, Jr., Frank Carter. Good-by, Miss Crosby. I'll see you soon." He hung the receiver back on the hook and then clapped his hand over the ear with which he had been listening as if to relieve it from the effect of the volley fire that had been charged on it through the phone.

"Wow," he said, addressing the telephone operator on the opposite side of the room, beyond the little wooden fence. "Wow, but she certainly is some sour old maid. I thought I'd kid her into good humor, but it was the wrong tack. I wonder if she'll call my bluff and come down and see how warm we are. But say, Nathan, try to get the coal commissioner on the wire again. It's a shame to run the fires so low. Ask them if they can't let me speak to him personally. It seems as if something ought to be done."

A half-hour later young Carter heard a very low but unmistakable whistle. It was Nathan's way of indicating that something worth observing was occurring in the office. There was a note of admiration in the whistle—distinctly it was his way of signaling to the other boys in the office and Mr. Carter, who was still young enough to be interested in such a signal even though he was a member of the firm—the proximity of a pretty girl.

Carter looked up from his paper, caught the direction of Nathan's gaze and then whistled an answering whistle, very low, but still audible to Nathan. It was a pretty girl and she was approaching in the vicinity of Nathan. Enveloped in a voluminous fur-trimmed rough woolen coat of a dark violet hue, with her hands encased in a black muff to match the fur on her coat, with a picturesque black velvet hat, cut on the poke bonnet order, that cast much shadow on her face, there was still enough opportunity to see that the girl beneath so much warmth-giving clothes was young, animated and pretty.

The bewildered Nathan looked up as she approached and to her query that Carter did not hear, he nodded to the desk of the youngest member of the firm. Then the violet coat and the delicate aroma of violet sachet that went with it moved toward the little wooden fence that hedged in Mr. Carter's desk.

"Here I am," said the girl. "I'm the tenant in Four D., Marbridge court. Where do you want me to sit—inside the fence or outside?"

Carter jumped from his seat and was so confused that all he could say was: "Inside the fence—please take this chair, any chair, any chair. Yes, indeed. You—are actually Miss Crosby? How very good of you."

"No, I won't take your chair. I'll take this little one," she said, slipping out of her coat and revealing a very neatly fitted plain blue serge dress beneath. She placed the chair precisely half way between the radiator and the window where the light would come over her left shoulder. "There," she said. "I like it just like that. I shall knit and not disturb you at all. Please sit down, Mr. Carter. You can't imagine what a pleasure it is to be warm."

Carter noted a tone of asperity in the girl's voice but he did not feel in the least irritated by it. He tried to swing himself around in his swivel chair so that he could go on with the work before him, but the chair seemed to swing of its own accord around again so that he sat looking at his guest.

"So—so you took my invitation seriously, did you? I'm glad." He laughed with embarrassment and the girl opened two blue eyes wide and round, with studied naivety, behind which Carter knew lay much sarcasm. "Why, didn't you mean that you wanted me to come?" she asked. "You first suggested the theater, but you see, I've been at the theater till I've seen every show in town and every movie in the neighborhood. And I simply must get those army sweaters done!" Carter noticed that she had taken a half finished khaki sweater from her bag.

Even to his inexperienced eyes the knitting seemed wonderfully firm, warm and compact and he noted the gold ends of the knitting needles.

"I've called on all my friends. You see I don't know many people in town, and I've shopped till I've bought a trunkful of things I don't need. I've spent hours in church and other hours in the museum and the public libraries. So your invitation was very welcome. Perhaps if I had always lived in the North I could stand the apartment. But you see this is my first winter North. I came with my aunt and now she has gone away for a few weeks and I'm alone. One feels the cold more when one is alone, I think." Then promising not to disturb Mr. Carter any more she continued her knitting in silence. From time to time when Mr. Carter felt that her eyes were intent on her knitting he swung around in his swivel chair and caught a timid glance at the girl. Sometimes he noticed the graceful ankle, at other times the slender capable hands that were so neatly framed in the tight white lace cuffs of her dark sleeves. At other times he noticed the glint of auburn in her hair and then again the long curve of the dark lashes that shaded her blue eyes. He did not know that from beneath those long lashes the blue eyes were perfectly capable of observing his stolen glances though the graceful fingers went on uninterruptedly with the needles and wool.

"Couldn't you give me a job?" Nancy Crosby put this question to Mr. Carter one day after she had been making her visits to his office for the purpose of keeping warm during the course of an entire week. "I am getting tired of knitting. One can't do that all the time. I could do copying for you and sort over papers perhaps and stick up envelopes and stamps and things."

So Mr. Carter secured a little mahogany desk, had it placed beside his own and there established Nancy Crosby as his volunteer assistant. They had finally agreed that the money that she earned as his assistant should be contributed to the Red Cross.

It was in the afternoon of that day that Mr. Carter dropped in at the Marbridge Court and getting the emergency key to apartment Four D from the janitor there let himself into the empty apartment and did a little amateur tinkering on his own account. That morning through his incessant efforts a goodly supply of coal had been deposited in the coal bins of the Marbridge Court.

Nancy Crosby continued to work for him for a week more. He asked her one day whether her apartment was still cold. "Yes," she said, "it really is dreadful. There isn't any steam in the living room radiator, though the bedroom radiators are all right. But you see I can't stay there in the day time. Isn't it strange, for the other tenants are perfectly comfortable now."

"Yes, it is funny," agreed Carter, and began to read a lease on his desk with eagerness.

At the end of that week Nancy's aunt was expected to return and Nancy had indicated that she would have to give up her job.

"I took it just to be spiteful. In fact, I came down to bother you, just to make you furious. I thought you were holding off the steam so as to save money and I intended to find out and to make you so tired of seeing me around that you would get the coal at any cost. But really I have had a lovely time. Thank you for making it so pleasant. But now that aunt is coming back I really wish something could be done about that apartment."

"I'll go up myself," Carter promised. "Maybe something is the matter with the living room radiator. I'll have it attended to at once. But—but—we aren't going to forget each other now, are we? You see, I've been getting terrifically interested in you, though I suppose to you I'm an impossible sort of fellow."

"Impossible!" echoed Nancy. "You don't suppose I would have fibbed about the radiator if I hadn't wanted an excuse to be with you. I haven't even noticed whether it was hot or cold."

"You haven't," gasped Carter. "And I put the valve out of commission in your living room."

Hair Often Ruined By Careless Washing

If you want to keep your hair looking its best, be careful what you wash it with. Don't use prepared shampoos or anything else, that contains too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is just ordinary mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and greaseless), and is better than anything else you can use.

One or two teaspoonfuls will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at any pharmacy, it's very cheap, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months.

Voice of The People

Dear Sir: I was pleased to see the special mention made of the late Alfred G. Airries, 193 Westcott street. It must be a terrible misfortune to be totally or partly blind. But I think he made a good living, as there was something so very pleasing about him.

The first time that I met him he was trying to find the sidewalk with his cane or walking stick, past Mr. Mann's sawmill and lumber yard; and as there was no sidewalk on that side of the street of course he failed. I went to him and helped him out of the difficulty, and afterwards invited him to come and have dinner with us at Christmas, of which he took advantage; and any time he was up this way to come in and have a meal with us, to which he consented. It was from him I got those wonderful verses called "The Three Bidders," from Rev. Rowland Hill, in old London:

The Three Bidders.

Will you listen kind friends, for a moment
While a story I unfold,
A marvellous talk of a wonderful tale
Of a noble lady of old.
How hand and heart at an auction mart,
And soul and body were sold.

It was on the broad king's highway,
More than a century ago;
That a preacher stood though of noble blood,
Telling the fallen and low
Of a Saviour's love, and a home above—
And a peace that they all might know.

All crowded around to listen,
And they wept at the wondrous love
That forgave their sin and receive them in His spotless mansion above.
While now through the crowd a lady proud
Her gilded chariot drove.

Make room cried the haughty outrider,
You are closing the King's highway,
My lady is late, and their Majesties wait;
Give way, good people, I pray.
The preacher heard, and his soul was stirred,
And he cried to the rider, "Nay."

His eye like the lightning flashes,
His voice like a trumpet rings;
Your grand fete days and your fashions' ways
Are all but perishing things.
'Tis the King's highway, but I hold it to-day
In the name of the King of Kings.

Then bending his gaze on the lady,
And making her soft eyes fall;
And now is his name a sale I proclaim
And bids for this fair lady call.
Who will purchase the whole, her body and soul,
Coronet, jewels and all.

I see all ready three bidders.
The world steps up as the first;
I will give her the pleasures and all the treasures
For which his votaries thirst.
They shall dance through each day more joyous and gay,
With a quiet grave at the worst.

Then outspoke the Devil boldly:
The kingdoms of earth are mine,
Fair lady, thy name, with an envied fame
On their brightest tablet shall shine.
Only give me thy soul and I'll give the whole,
Their glory and wealth to be thine.

And pray what hast thou to offer,
Thou Man of Sorrows unknown?
And He gently said, My blood I have shed
To purchase her for my own.
To conquer the grave, her soul to save—
I trod the winepress alone.

I will give her my cross of suffering,
My cup of sorrows to share,
But with endless love in my home above—
All shall be righted there.
She shall walk in white, in a robe of light,
And a radiant crown shall wear.

Thou hast heard the terms, fair lady
That each hath offered for thee;
Which wilt thou choose, or which will lose—
This life or the life to be?
The fable was mine, but choice is yet thine,
Sweet lady, which of the three?

Nearer the stand of the preacher
The gilded chariot stole,
And each head was bowed as over the crowd
The thundering accents roll.
And every word the lady heard
Burned in her very soul.

Pardon, good people, she whispered,
As she rose from her cushioned seat;
full they lay as the crowd made way,
You could hear her pulses beat.
And each head was bare as the lady fair.
Knelt at the preacher's feet.

She took from her hands the jewels,
The coronet from her brow;
Lord Jesus, she said, as she bowed her head,
The highest bidder art Thou.
Thou gavest for my sake Thy life—I take Thy offer, and take it now.

Give me Thy cross of suffering,
Welcome earth's sorrow and loss;
Let my portion be to win souls for Thee—
Perish earth's glitter and dross.
I gladly lay down earth's coveted crown,
Saviour, to take Thy cross.

I know the world and its pleasures
At best are but weary and clay,
And the tempter bold and his honours and gold
Prove ever a fatal decay.
I long for the rest, Thy bid is best;
Lord Jesus, I take it with joy.

Amen, said the noble preacher,
And the people wept aloud.
Years rolled on and they all have gone
Around that altar that bowed;
Lady and throng have been swept along
On the wind like a morning cloud.
But the Saviour has claimed His purchase
And around His radiant seat
A mightier throng in an endless song
The wondrous story repeat.
And a form more fair is bending there,
Laying her Crown at His feet.

So now in eternal glory,
She rests from her cross and care,
But her spirit above, with a longing love,
Seems calling on you to share
Her endless reward in the joy of the Lord.
Oh, will you not answer her there.

Respectfully,
J. H. Taylor,

Strictly Logical.

Prof. Sudbury, who was extremely nearsighted, went to the barber's, sat down and allowed himself to be shaved. When the artist was done with him he did not move, and for awhile nobody disturbed him. But other customers began to arrive, and the chair was needed. The head barber, suspecting that his learned patron had fallen asleep, asked his boy to wake him. The professor heard him.

"No, my good man," he said, "I am not asleep. The fact is I am frightfully nearsighted. When I took my glasses off just now I was no longer able to see myself in the mirror opposite. Naturally I supposed I had already gone home."

Both Disappointed.

Wife—If I'd known that you were after my money I would never have listened to you.

Husband—And if I'd known you'd be so mighty close with your money I would never have proposed.

She Hit Back.

"I told teacher, pop, that you said she taught you when you was a little boy."

"What did she say?"

"That stupidity must run in the family."

Plenty of Orders.

"My friend Wombat says he can't catch up with his orders."

"Is he a manufacturer?"

"Oh, no. Merely a man with a wife and five grownup daughters."

British Forces Opened New Offensive This Morning

They Have Advanced From Two To Three Miles

Number of Places Were Captured by the British in the Latest Offensive

New Attack Opened This Morning and Was a Complete Surprise to the Enemy—Counter Attacks Repulsed.

BRITISH OFFICIAL

Canadian Press:

LONDON, Aug. 21.— (Official.) — The British at 4.45 this morning opened an attack on a wide front north of the Ancre river. Satisfactory progress is being made at 9 a.m., says the official statement. On Tuesday afternoon the British threw back strong German forces which attempted to counter attack and recapture positions north and south of the Scarpe river.

Points Captured.

British forces have captured Courcelles, Achietle Petit, and have reached Moyenville and Beaumont-Sur-Ancre in their drive, which began this morning north of the Ancre river, according to advices from the front. The British attack this morning was over a distance of about 8 1-2 miles. It is reported that the British have advanced two or three miles along this front. The high contour between Adinfer and Moyenville was the northern zone of attack, and Puisieux-Au-Mont, the southern landmark of the front. The enemy here lately has been withdrawing in order to increase the depth of his defensive.

Raiding Activity.

While the width of the attacking front is not clearly defined, a wide front probably would include the line from the Ancre to the Scarpe, about 15 miles. There has not been any heavy fighting on the line north of the Ancre, although the Germans some days ago retired slightly on a front between Beaumont Hamel and Bucquoy. There has been more or less raiding activity, however. The battle front from the north of the Ancre to the north of Lens has not seen as great a change as other sectors between Ypres and Rheims since the beginning of the German offensive on March 21. In making an attack here it would appear that Marshal Foch is striving to break the old German line in the Arras area. Any considerable forward movement here would menace German positions north and south for many miles. Strategically here the blow would seem to accompany the French offensive south of the Oise and a strong attempt to force the Germans to retire all along the line.

Some German field guns and two hundred prisoners had been taken in the British drive at an early hour. The attack of the British this morning was made without artillery preparation. It was completely successful and was made by the British Third Army under General Byng.

CANADIAN FISHING TRAWLER SEIZED

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

AN ATLANTIC PORT, Aug. 21.—A German submarine late yesterday seized the big Canadian fishing trawler Triumph. The crew, who had reached shore safely, said they believed that the Germans intended to use the trawler as a raider. An armed guard of Germans had been placed aboard and no preparations were made to sink the ship, the Triumph's men said.

Men Refused to Attack

Germans Show a Willingness to Retire on the Slightest Provocation.

(United Press Service.)
(By Lowell Mellett.)

WITH THE BRITISH ARMY IN FRANCE, Aug. 21.—Whether it is because the men's fighting spirits are gone, or because the higher command is deliberately following a programme involving a retirement wherever they are pushed, the British are finding that on various parts of their line the Germans give way with an unexpected readiness that is like shadow fighting at times. Some fight of the Boches spirit or lack of it, was gauged the night before last when an enemy regiment having retreated to the far west, was ordered to attack Paisiex north of Albert. The remnant refused preparing a written protest and sending it to the commanders. The latter telegraphed back repeating his order. The remainder attacked half-heartedly and lost heavily. Some companies of this regiment now number only twenty-five men.

Rev. W. J. Torpey Given Car by His Friends in Forest City, Iowa

Rev. Father W. J. Torpey, who has for the past ten years had charge of the Forest City and Lake Mills pastorate of the Catholic Church, has been transferred to Clarion, Iowa, and on Sunday, August 18th, will deliver his farewell sermon to the people of St. James' Catholic Church of this city.

Tuesday evening a farewell reception was tendered him at which a delightful programme was rendered. The speakers of the evening were Rev. Dean O'Connor, and Father Bacci of Mason City, Father Malloy, of Oelwein, Father Eardley of Belmond, Father Baxter of Tama City, Father Torpey responding in his usual gracious manner. County Attorney Boynton spoke in behalf of the people of Forest City and community. In kind but well chosen words he spoke of his good and far reaching influence and his sterling qualities as a citizen.

At the close of the programme refreshments were served by the ladies of the church. As an expression of their love for him and their appreciation of the splendid services rendered the community he was presented with a new Buick car from the parishes of Forest City and Lake Mills, and the good citizens of Forest City.

Father Torpey's departure leaves a place in the hearts and homes of our people, especially those who have known him for his broad mindedness, that can never be filled, save by his presence. The charge will be filled by Father Creagon, who comes here from Waterloo, and for whom his friends at that place have a very high regard as a pastor and citizen.—The Forest City Summit, Iowa.

Rev. Father Torpey is a native of Peterboro County, and will be remembered by his friends here.

FRANK JENNE Says:

A Semi-ready suit always justifies its price. Every ounce of material, and every detail of tailoring, is the best procurable. Economical days demand that only the best be purchased. A Semi-ready suit represents the best in clothing. A good selection of suits greatly reduced in price during my "Investment Sale." "Come to me."

Regent Tailors Open Business Saturday Next

In Fine New Store in the Braund Block, Charlotte Street.

The Regent Tailors of Toronto, which opens its Peterborough store in the Braund Block on Saturday next, are very optimistic over the prospects for business in this city. They are advising the men of Peterborough to make purchases of their suits and and overcoats from their imported stocks of cloth at $17.50.

They are enabled to make up these garments for men at this price as they imported some time ago a heavy stock of woollens from the Old Country at very favourable prices, and of excellent quality.

They claim a direct saving to the men of the city of from eight to ten dollars on a suit or overcoat.

They want big business on their opening day, Saturday next. They sell their goods with a guarantee to fit and to be perfectly satisfactory, or money will be refunded.

A hearty invitation is extended to the men of the city to call and see the stock carried, and they will be made entirely welcome.

SOUND ADVICE.

We give you sound advice regarding your eyes. Glasses are recommended only when needed, and then only the right kind. If in doubt consult Dr. Lacey, 410 George Street.

Peterboro Soldiers In Casualty Lists

Private R. W. Jones Leaves a Mother and Four Daughters to Run a One Hundred Acre Farm in Apsley.

TO-DAY'S LIST

The names of a number of Peterboro soldiers appear in the casualty liste issued last night and to-day.

Back in Apsley is a 100-acre farm on which a mother and four daughters reside. Gladys, the eldest daughter, has been running the farm, and helping the rest of the family to keep the home fires burning, while two brothers went overseas to help turn back the hordes of hell that threatened to dominate the world. One brother, Hugh, fell at Vimy Ridge, leaving the other brother to carry on. Gladys and her mother, aided by the three younger sisters, redoubled their efforts to keep the farm in a state of productivity so that the remaining brother would have something to come home to. On August 8th of this year the Canadians again went into action and among those who fell wounded was Private R. W. Jones. Since that Private "Will" has died of wounds, and the two brothers whom the mother and four daughers have been working the farm for are no more. Mrs. Benjamin Jones received word this morning of the death of her second son.

Pte. T. J. Fitzgerald.

Mrs. Patrick Fitzgerald of Indian River, received official notice from Ottawa this morning that her son, Pte. Thomas Joseph Fitzgerald, had been admitted to No. 22, General Hospital, Camiers, suffering from gunshot wounds in the right arm, received on August 9th. Pte. Fitzgerald was a member of the 20th Canadians. He enlisted with the 93rd Battalion, in Peterboro, and this is the second time he has been wounded since going overseas.

Pte. McMahon.

Mrs. Margaret McMahon, 554 Rogers street, has received word from the Director of Records that her son Pte. Maurice McMahon, No. 195152, of the Canadian Mounted Rifles, has been admitted to No. 5 General Hospital, on August 11, suffering from a gunshot wound in the knee. Pte. McMahon went overseas with the 93rd Battalion.

Driver G. J. Ranger.

Mrs. Agnes Ranger, 484 Weller street, has been officially notified that her husband, Driver Gilbert John Ranger, was killed in action on August 9th. The deceased, who was born in England, resided in Peterborough about nine years prior to enlisting, and was an employee of the Peterborough Lock Works.

Sergt. Harry Barrett.

Mr. C. Barrett, 492 Cedar street, has received word that his son, Sergt. Harry Barrett, has been wounded in the stomach with a bullet. No other particulars were given. Sergt. Barrett was a sergeant in the 57th Regiment and enlisted with the 39th Battalion. He was later transferred to the famous 2nd Battalion, and has been at the front for over three years. Before enlisting he was employed at the C.G.E.

Other names on the list follow. Particulars regarding these men are lacking:

Steam Trawler is Raiding Off Coast

Vessel Was Captured by a German Submarine Crew—Several Schooners Sunk.

PATROL BOATS OUT

Canadian Press:

A CANADIAN ATLANTIC PORT, Aug. 21.—The steam trawler Triumph, filled with two guns and wireless and manned by sixteen Germans from the boat which captured her yesterday, is raiding boats off the coast of Nova Scotia, and crews of schooners sunk by the triumph have arrived here. The vessels known to have been sunk are Una P. Saunders of Lunenburg, E. Pyatt Andrew of Gloucester, Mass., and the Francis J. O'Hara of Boston. Capt. Wallace Bruce, master of the Gloucester schooner, told the Canadian Press to-day that his vessel was held up by the Triumph yesterday afternoon and that he and his crew were given ten minutes to leave the ship. The Germans then sank her with bombs. The Triumph then moved over to the Boston and Lunenburg vessels, sinking them in turn. The dories from three vessels reached here at ten o'clock this morning. The fishermen say that while making for this port they heard shots and they believe that a number of other fishing vessels have been sunk.

Capt. Myrrhe, master of the Triumph, who landed here with his men this morning, told the Canadian Press to-day that the captain of the submarine said that his was only one of six U-boats operating on this coast. "We intend to destroy fishing fleets," the German commander said to Capt. Myrrhe.

Giving Chase.

Canadian Press:

WASHINGTON, D.C., Aug. 21 — Strong forces of swift naval patrol boats and destroyers sped to-day to the North Atlantic fishing banks, where the trawler "Triumph," captured yesterday by German submarine, armed and manned, is reported to be raiding fishing fleets. Naval officers here think the recapture of the trawler or her enforced destruction by the German crew is a certainty.

GOVERNMENT TAKES DRASTIC ACTION

TOKIO, Aug. 21.—Rice riots continue here and mobs of from three hundred to ten thousand attacked and destroyed several rice warehouses and Geisha houses to-day. They were eventually dispersed by soldiers. The government is taking drastic action in regard to food stuffs.

Advance is Continuing

French Have Made Additional Gains at Some Points.

(United Press Service.)
(By Webb Miller.)

PARIS, Aug. 20.—General Mangin is continuing his advance between the Oise and the Aisne, and has made additional important gains at some points. Several more villages have been occupied.

He is gradually extending his fighting front eastward until it now reaches from the Oise almost to Soissons over an irregular line nearly twenty-five miles long.

The Germans are rushing up reinforcements in motor trucks and are concentrating their reserves in Carleponte and Ourscamps forests, bordering the east bank of the Oise from Failly northward to Semigny. The French, however, are making good progress just east of these wood areas behind Nampcel, where the most violent fighting is going on.

Mangin is now in possession of a series of villages and many other strong points. He is holding the Carleponte-Cuts road. Hills 130 and 141. Dell Fontine and Caisne. He is also believed to have taken Hill 156 and has reached the land north of Vassens, occupying Vauresis, two miles and a half north-west of Soissons, Ergany, six miles north-west of Soissons, Valpries Farm and Allt, southward to Pommieres, two miles west of Soissons.

The number of prisoners which reached more than 8,000 yesterday, is steadily increasing.

CANADIAN CASUALTIES

(Canadian Press.))

Ottawa, August 21. — Ninety-nine Canadian soldiers killed in action, 38 died of wounds, and 515 wounded, are included in lists of 556 names given out in casualty lists here to-day.

SHANTYMEN'S ASSOCIATION

Rev. Thos. Joplin, Field Secretary, Is in The City.

The Rev. Thos. Joplin field secretary of the Shantymen's Christian Association, is in Peterboro, at the Y.M.C.A. on his annual visit in the interests of that society. He will remain here for a few days making collections. Letters may be addressed to him in care of the Y.M.C.A. Peterboro.

The shantymans' work is going ahead very nicely. Owing to the war, large sections have been left without missionaries and this throws an increased responsibility upon the Shantymen's Association. Last year 30,256 shantymen were reached by the association. Recently the work has been extended to the United States. The Canadian society employs 18 missionaries, 545 camps were visited and 67 gospel meetings were held.

CIGAR MEN EFFECTED.

Effort Made to Prohibit Issuing of Coupons.

A point of law which will interest local tobacco dealers will be decided when the United Cigar Stores will be in the Hamilton courts on Friday charged with a breach of the statute in issuing coupons with their goods.

The Hamilton authorities interpret the statute as prohibiting such a procedure. If the law is held as meaning such, all dealers will be effected.

Dobbin is preparing a statement for publication to-morrow dealing with the coal situation, especially that phase of it resulting from this official announcement.

"HOBO KING" WOULD FORCE "BUMS" TO DO THEIR BIT FOR COUNTRY

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21. — Jeff Davis, "hobo king," blew into town to interest General Crowder in work for the country's "bums." "You see", said Jeff, "the difference between the hobo, tramp and bum, is that the first can and does work, the second can and will work if he has to, and the third won't work.

"Now 50,000 hobos are working for their country to-day. They've gone out of our ranks into the army and navy. This 'work or fight law' will cop a majority of the tramps, but the bum —the older bird, who frequents the barrel house and missions, a drug on society, we've got to get him.

"I'm going to see General Crowder and try to get him interested in having these bums put at work peeling potatoes and doing the jobs around cantonments. I say, free the soldiers from this stuff and let the bums do it."

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 21ST, 1918.

WHY NOT DISFRANCHIZE THEM?

Deserters who fail to surrender themselves to the military authorities on or before Saturday, August 24th, are threatened with drastic penalties of the law. If this announcement had specified the punishment that awaits the skulkers, it might have brought more of them from their hiding places.

And in this connection, the Government would have good cause for considering the drastic measure of disfranchising deserters whom the military authorities fail to apprehend. By their refusal to perform the first duty of citizenship they have proscribed themselves, and justice to the men who are reporting for service when called, is surely a valid reason for perpetuating this proscription, politically, at least.

A RICH HARVEST.

Farmers' barns are stuffed with the sheaves of the most bountiful harvest Ontario has reaped in many years. In the labour of bringing in the crops, machinery has done its bit from seeding to cutting, but fields of unstooked grain, lying where the binders dropped them, are impressive evidence of the scarcity of manual help. The farmer himself, has worked wonders, in fact so effective have been his efforts that his city friends, remindful of his lugubrious predictions of last fall and winter, are astonished at the rapidity with which the fields have been stripped of their golden burden. They had expected to be dragooned by the Food Board or some other authorities, and billeted among the farmers, until the last sheaf had been drawn in. But the farmer, often with the assistance of wife or daughter, and in many cases helped by hired man or son, is toiling from daylight until dark, depending as little as possible on blundering help from the cities.

The extremely satisfactory reports from the farmers cannot fail to animate the people of this province with heart-felt gratitude for the manifold riches of this harvest. We are more fortunate than we know.

SAFEGUARDS ON THE RIVER.

The City Council should not let this summer pass without procuring adequate grappling irons to be distributed between the wharves, the most frequented bathing places, and perhaps the Fire Hall and the Police Station. It is doubtful whether they would be useful in life saving, but certainly they would facilitate the work of quickly recovering bodies from the lake and river.

In an emergency some years ago, Mr. H. B. Rye, proprietor of the Otonabee boat house, had a set of large hooks made, but they have since disappeared. Mayor Duncan has tried in vain to impress the Government with the necessity of building a protective wall at the locks, as a means of lessening the danger that surrounds the canoe slide. This is not the only interest he has evinced in the safeguarding of life on the river, and it is hoped that he may persuade the council to provide proper equipment for the inevitable emergencies that mar our summer's aquatic pleasur s.

The police constables and firemen are ever ready to assist in the work of rescue and recovery, and the least the city can do is to supply them with the necessary implements. Not only grappling hooks, but life buoys, too, should be placed at the popular resorts within the city and vicinity. They may be the means of saving even one life, the value of which excludes all questions of expenditure. Surely this responsibility can be fixed upon some official or public department while the demand for action, prompted by the latest drowning, is still strong and insistent.

GERMANY AND THE BOYCOTTS.

The growth of popular movements here for the trade punishment of Germany after the war is stimulated by submarine raids on helpless American fishing boats and other small craft. Evidence of this may be seen in the success of the American Defense Society's boycott campaign. Two or three weeks ago the society began to ask Americans to sign a pledge binding them to buy nothing made in Germany during the remainder of their lives. Already more than 200,000 signatures have been obtained, and the Boycott Committee's Chairman says that "tens of thousands are coming in daily." The society expected to get at least 20,000,000. Probably that number will be reached in the near future. Such movements, of which the British and French Seamen's boycott is a prominent example, may be considered apart from the plans of Governments for legislation or peace terms. They will be effective, and their influence upon Governments must be taken into account. The world knows what some of the trade plans are. Great Britain intends to exclude certain imports, or to admit them only by special license, and has tied up raw materials in her colonies for years to come by purchase contracts. We shall defend our new dyestuffs and chemical industries against German competition. In many ways Germany will suffer trade loss, whatever may be the requirements of a peace settlement.

The severity of these requirements will be determined mainly by public opinion in the countries of Germany's foes, and this public opinion will become more and more hostile in the United States as the number of American soldiers killed increases and additional submarine crimes are reported. Probably those who sign the boycott pledge would have our Government insist upon repayment of money exacted from Belgium and other countries, the restoration of buildings destroyed in France, surrender of the German Navy and mercantile marine to replace in part the ships which have been sunk, and the payment of money enough in cash or bonds to cover all war expenses. The Germans and their Government should consider the boycotts, with the tendency of public sentiment that suggests and supports them.—New York Times.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

There is some unholy consolation in the knowledge that Canada hasn't a monopoly on profiteers.

The first frosts on the pumpkin is a warning of the frost that will soon be on the pane.

The skull and cross-bones on the caps of Germany's almost forgotten Death's Head Hussars, the Ku Klux of Kultur, has become the mocking symbol of her shattered armies.

If the Independent Labour Party hopes to attain political power, it must first make more Labour men of the men who labour.

In assuming the portfolio of Education, Hon. Dr. Cody has the earnest support of the province. Perhaps he should first inoculate himself against the hookworm, which is said to have been the only thing working in the Department of Education for some years.

Some farmers are now complaining that their barns won't hold all their crops.

The advanced price of automobiles will not check the extravagance of those persons who should be using their war gains to build barbed wire entanglements between themselves and the poor house.

Cheese Price Pared to Pay Increased Freight Rates

Salesmen This Morning Questioned the Best Offering the Buyers Made and Were Reminded That Rates Were Recently Advanced.

1535 BOXES AT 22 1-8 CENTS

The first meeting of the Cheese Board in five weeks was held this morning when 1,535 boxes, representing the make of the past two weeks, was sold to Mr. T. Thompson for 22⅛ cents. Salesmen objected to the recent decrease in price, but the buyers pointed out to them that the advances in freight rates that were authorized a short time ago have affected the price paid the farmers. The explanation was accepted, the salesmen realizing that there was nothing they could do under present conditions.

An indefinite adjournment was arranged. The Board will meet at the call of the executive, and this may not be needed until late in October.

INTERESTING LETTER FROM FLIGHT LIEUT. G. C. LOGAN

Peterboro Man is Now a Prisoner in Germany—Relates His Experiences.

Germany, June 4th, 1918.
Offizier, Gefangenen, Lager,
Holzminden,

Dearest people,—June is now nicely under way and "little Willy" over three months a "Krieges Gefangener." Cheerio! Only fifteen more to do—not much is it? Well, I had my first word from home 25th May, a letter written April 1st. Pretty good time, eh? It sure was good to hear that you knew of my whereabouts and safety, and to get news direct from home. Here's hoping there's lots more soon. I received my very first parcel on May 24th, white bread from Copenhagen, and my first food parcel from the "Y. M.C.A. of North America" (Copenhagen Society) and that and the letters coming together were certainly welcome. Gilbert and I are messing together and are getting on O.K. I have not begun to get R. A. F. parcels, but he has, and mine will no doubt be along shortly. I did not come back from the front as directly as he did, and so wasn't able to write till some time later. We have two big cookhouses, one for each Vaserne. They are just big sheds, closed on three sides, the stoves of brick and large surface, so there's not much of a queue waiting at meal times. Did I tell you about meeting Ralph Smith here? I think that's quite as funny as running into Gilbert at Karlsruhe. You know he was in Uncle Gordon's office, in the Herald, and through my letters got interested in the R.F.C., joining up at Toronto just before I got my last leave. Then uncle wrote me of his coming to England and we were to get in touch through Mr. Nethersole. However, before we got a chance, I came to France, and he was up to see me at my squadron just a day or so after I was brought down. He didn't see me! And then we meet here! Another chap I met here is from Lindsay, and whom I remembered from P.C.I. and L.C.I. rugby days, though never knew personally. We got talking over old times while out on a walk the other day and found he was born in Iroquois and knows Kit Leacy well—was in her hospital in Folkestone! You will wonder what I have in the clothing line. By the time you get my letters it will be too late to send summer duds, but I'll want winter wear. I have a pair of "shorts" made from a pair of breeches a roommate gave me, a light washable summer tunic which I was lucky enough to get from the clothing store, so I'm not so worse for summer, eh? I have my two sleeveless sweaters with me, a khaki shirt, a couple of other light shirts from C. store, a silk undershirt, a suit of heavy underwear (worse for wear) and a great coat.

The Italian class is coming along O. K. and I'm thinking of joining a poultry class. Baseball is coming along about as usual. My team in the new league is not doing any too well. Won one game, lost two. I've purchased a German grammar and will brush up in that line in spare time. The weather has been rather dull and cold lately, but was, before the bad spell, beautifully warm and bright.

We have very interesting lectures here frequently, some mighty fine speakers in the bunch. We had a spirts day last Saturday. There are some splendid athletes here in almost every line. The races included all the usual heats up to the mile, band race, boot race, etc. Am keeping records of it and will tell you all about it when I see you again. Well, I think I've said all I can now. I know my letters are terribly disappointed specimens, but you'll excuse George.

Lieut. G. C. Logan,
Royal Air Force,
Lager 1197,
Holzminden,
Germany.

VILLA PAPER BULLETS PARALIZE RICH MEXICAN

SEATTLE, Wash., Aug. 21.—Villa, the bandit, was much surprised. The rich old man had fallen as the guns of the firing squad roarer. On almost any other occasion of the kind Villa would have expected his victim to fall, but this time—

"Por Dios!" Had his men forgotten or had they disobeyed?

Puzzled, the chief walked up to the crumpled figure and bent over. There were no wound marks. Yet the man neither spoke nor moved.

Unable to understand, Villa and his men left the prostrate, motionless form. A little later came rescuers. They found that the man had not been touched by a bullet. In fact the bullets were made of paper—at Villa's order. For some mysterious reason he did not wish to harm the man, but merely to frighten him into giving him money, but the suspense and worry brought on the shock. The man has not spoken or moved a limb since.

This story is tlod by the nephew of the man, J. M. Eschevarria de Rigis, of Mexico City, who is visiting in Seattle.

Another good tip is to enamel your shelves white, instead of using paper. A damp cloth will remove dirt and dust.

Riversides Defeated the De Laval Aggregation to the Tune of Fifteen to One Separator Men Never Had a Look-in—Last Night's Performance Was a Poor Exhibition—Riversides Win the League—The Game by Innings.

Any chance that the Thistles had of winning the league was thrown away last night, when the Riversides trimmed the De Laval outfit to the tune of 15-1. Poor pitching by Sharpe, and the way the Riversides made their hits in bunches, gave the Riversides not only the game, but the championship of the league. The bottom fell completely out of the De Laval's chances when the Solomonites scored 4 runs.

First Innings.

Sheehy made a single, but McCarney flew out. Guerin slammed the ball for a two-base hit and Phelan got on the bases via a bunt. Murray got a single and both Sheehy and Phelan scored. Smyth struck out and Field got a life on an error. Both Field and Murray subsequently scored. Murty was out.

Second Innings.

safety on the pitcher's error. McCarney also bunted and reached first. Guerin, with the bases full, made a two-base hit, driving in Kirn, Sheehy and McCarney. Phelan managed to get a safety, and Guerin scored when Murary made a single. Both Smyth and Field fanned and Murty was out on a pop fly.

Frost was out, s.e.e. two, three. Lipset drove a hot one down third and stole second. Nellist fanned. Adams flied and the side was retired.

Third Innings.

Kirn fanned, but Sheehy found a hole between first and second. McCarney made a single. Sheehy went to second and reached third on a misthrow. Guerin drove the ball for a two-bagger and Sheehy and McCarney scored. Phelan was out on a bunt and Murray struck out.

Legon, for the Separator men, was struck by the pitcher and Nellist took his place on the ba... Dugan was out on a fly. Sharpe made a beautiful Texas leaguer. Taylor flied out. McDonald made a drive to the pitcher and Nellist was caught off third.

Fourth Innings.

Smyth got on the bases and stole second. Field walked, but Murty fanned. Kirn made a beautiful bunt and reached first. Field got to third and Smyth added another tally to the score. Sheehy walked, making the bases full. McCarney reached first on a bunt and scored Field. Guerin was out when Nellist caught his fly. Kirn left third base, the ball hit him and bounced away and he and Sheehy and McCarney scored. Sharpe asked to be relieved, and was replaced by Frost. Phelan, the first man up before Frost, fanned, retiring the side.

Frost flied to Murty. Lipsett walked, but was caught stealing second. Nellist walked and Adams fanned.

Fifth Innings.

Murray again fanned. Smyth was robbed of a hit when Lipsett, the shortstop, made a beautiful pick-up of his grounder. Field got on the bases when he was hit with the ball. Murty was out when he flied to third, retiring the side.

Legon made a single, but reached second on a misthrow. Dugan was out on a grounder. Sharpe struck out, but Taylor managed to put a ball through shirt-stop and scoring Legon. McDonald ended it when he hit a pop fly.

Sixth Innings.

Kirn grounded a hot one to Lipsett. Sheehy walked and stole second. McCarney died on a fly to the second baseman. Guerin grounded out.

Both Frost and Lipsett were retired, but Nellist made a single. Adams ended the fit by flying to Smyth.

Seventh Innings.

Smyth made a beautiful running catch of Legon's long-arm fly. Dugan was unable to reach first and Sharpe ended the game when he struck out.

Score by innings:

Riversides	442500x—15
De Laval	0001000— 1

Batteries:— Riversides— Kirn and Phelan; De Laval—Sharpe, Frost and Taylor.

Umpire—Kay.

NOTES ON THE GAME.

The game was called in the seventh on account of darkness.

Kirn had the edge on Sharpe in the pitching box. Kirn's support was gilt-edge.

Guerin with his two-base hits put the score in the tens column.

Three new names were seen on the teams' roster, Smyth, Adams and Murty.

"Good-night" was the word in the fourth innings.

Taylor was the hero of the hour for the De Laval. He drove in their lone tally.

"Next," said Manager Jake Solomon.

CHAMPS AFTER BIGGER GAME.

Will Go to Cobourg To-day — Other Games in Prospect.

The Riversides, by last night's game, cinched the championship of the league and have already engaged new prey. To-day the team journeys to Cobourg to play a picked team in that town. On Thursday night a good game is promised when the Champions will meet a picked team from the other four teams of the league. This should be a good game, as there is some good material in the league. The game will be played at Riverside Park at 6.30 sharp. The proceeds will be used to help defray the expenses of the Peterborough team in the O. B. and A. A. series.

Fighters and "Fighters"

Now that Jack Dempsey has sent Fred Fulton "to the cleaners," as they say, at the ring side, people are claiming him as the world's champion, Jess Willard to the contrary.

There is a little fighter in France, the pride of that country, who is the real champion—Georges Carpentier. He is handy, very handy, with the gloves, but he gave up his chance for the fame and fortune of the acknowledged championship to fight for his country and for civilization. He has won a greater honour thereby, and when the war is over Carpentier will be hailed as the real fighter. Dempsey may be better with the fists, which however is not proved, but Carpentier will be the world's favourite.

Everybody should be in this war—if not fighting in the field of battle in France, fighting to save the crops in the harvest fields.

There is the chance for the fighting spirit to show itself with honour.

And believe, to be sanitary, must be scrupulously clean, for on them depends the virtue of our food stores, especially during the warmer days.

SPORTING COMMENT

In a town some distance back from the fighting line in France a ball game was arranged one Sunday. With about 500 men to select from, the promoters managed to get two pretty good teams together. Officers and privates were among the players. One of the best players was a captain, who ordinarily is the soul of dignity and reserve. On the same team with him was a coal-black negro who used to manage a team of his own in Mobile, Ala. In view of the fact that considerable was at stake and that the play was likely to require excellent team work, it was agreed that all formalitites should be put aside for the period of the game; in other words, that people should be called by their first names.

There were some familiarities, but none startling till the eighth inning, when the captain, on first base, started for third on a short hit. The darky was coaching at third and his heart was in the game. The run the captain might get was vital. So a the captain, sprinting as swiftly as he could, was plunging toward third, the darky was shouting at the top of his voice:

"Come on there, you kid! Come on come on—"

Just at that moment the captain tripped and rolled in a cloud of dust. There was still time to make it if he rose quickly. The negro, gathering the full power of his lungs, yelled:

"Come on, you; come on, you big stiff, you mud hen; waht are we payin' you for?"

Out of the dust cloud rolled the captain, safe at third. He put up his hand to call the game for a moment. Then, brushing dust from his clothes and panting for sufficient breath for the Brodingnagian utterance he was about to make, he said to the negro:

"Jim, listen to me, and listen good. From this moment on it's captain. Do you understand English? Captain—just plain Captain!"

An observing American citizen, a long time through the melting pot, read down a casualty list sent in by General Pershing, noted the proportion of names that plainly indicated the descent of the soldiers killed or wounded and suddenly remarked:

"They sure are giving the Germans hell."

Which reminds us that there are a lot of ball players of German extraction who are not exactly touchy about it, but who yet don't care to have the fact emphasized. For instance there is Fritz Maisel of the St. Louis Browns, American to the core, despite his name. Recently he suggested to his players that Fritzie didn't sound well when bellowed out in front of a grand stand, so now the rest of the Browns call him "Fred."

And then there's the case of Dutch Reuther, now in the army. The former ball player wasn't touchy about his nickname and no one thought anything about it until the ball team of his regiment, which was stationed at Camp Lewis, Wash., went up into Canada to play a bunch of Canucks an exhibition.

During some play or other a fellow player got excited and began to shout loud coaching words to Reuther.

"Come on, Dutch!" Show these Canadians something, Dutch!" was his cry.

Followed some rumbling and grumbling among the spectators. It reached the ears of Reuther's team and when they got wise to what was the matter the next time Reuther was coached a big husky American handed him this line of chatter:

"You're the boy, Scotty—put it over there, Scotty!"

And from then on "Dutch" Reuther became "Scotty" Reuther in his regiment.

The National League people will go far before they'll find another executive as capable as John K. Tener, although they may find one more plastic to the petty whims which sometimes beset certain club owners of the league. Tener combined judicial with executive ability to a great degree. He never flew off the handle, but acted firmly and promptly when the occasion demanded. He knew the playing end of the game thoroughly. One of his best achievements as head of the older baseball organization was his educating his club owners up to proper respect and support of umpires. Yet in case of a protest based on the question of interpretation of rule he would not fatuously support the umpire if the latter were wrong. He was in brief level-headed.

The Giants and Yankees have faded out of the picture. Once battling for first place, the Yanks are now battling for fifth. Probably the players of this team were more distracted by unprecedented developments than those of Boston, Cleveland and Washington, who seem to have held together better, though there is no visible reason why they should. The Giants, deprived though they were of valuable players through unavoidable circumstances, could have done better, it seems to me, had they had more of a fighting spirit. The Cubs seem to have outgamed them. They lost a factor influential in generating gameness when Kauff left them. Benton, too, is plucky. There are players on the team—two at least—who are stars in skill, but who in big series, critical occasions—at least that always has been my impression—have lacked the fighting heart, which would have been of more value than skill.

There's nothing like jumping on a man when he's down. Fulton didn't take half as many knocks in the ring with Dempsey as he's received since.

Earle Neale as a member of the Reds has been in three fights on the ball field with Fred Toney in Memphis; with Bill Killifer in Chicago; with Lee Magee in Brooklyn. By and bye he will get the reputation of being quarrelsome.

Max Carey has been in two twenty-one inning games with the Pirates. One was a defeat by the Giants, the other a victory over the Braves.

Slim Cladwell is the Babe Ruth of the Yankees, though not quite as much so.

Doesn't Johnny Evers look fine in his new uniform as overseas instructor of athletics for the Knights of Columbus? It's good for tired eyes to see him, and every baseball player will feel a glow within him as he looks on the picture of the lovable crab. There's no more gallant lad over there, and no bigger, braver or more patriotic heart than beats within that slight frame.

According to Miller Huggins, Frank Baker should be a .400 hitter. Baker has one batting fault which Huggins would like to correct, and the latter stakes his reputation as a judge of baseball ability on his prediction that Baker will be a .400 hitter if he will make the change. Baker's fault is his over-anxiety to hit, with the consequent tendency to take a swing at the first pitched ball. Opposing pitchers realize this and continually feed Baker the kind of ball that he is not likely to hit very far. During his recent batting spurt, when he was finishing up his first century of base hits, the Yankee slugger took his time and he did bat over .400 for quite a long time. But he loves to hit and cannot stand to see a ball go by if it is within reach. Baker has been hitting to left field more this year than ever before, and by looking over that first ball he should finish the season with a mark far above any figure of his previous seasons.

Benor, Herbert Hare, James Skinner, Charles Seymour and F. E. Convery.

KEELER'S RECORD HAS NEVER BEEN EQUALLED.

Many years have passed since Willie Keeler flashed his greatness in major league baseball, but none of the stars since his time have been able to better a batting performance of Keeler back in 1897. In that campaign Keeler went to the game of June 19 before a pitcher who held him hitless, Frank Killen of the Pirates turning the trick. Keeler previously had connected safely in each of the forty-four games played by the Baltimore club. His batting average over this stretch of games was .408, his hit collection including 65 singles, 8 doubles and 9 triples in 201 times at bat. Ty. Cobb came close to the record in 1911, when he went forty games without missing his hit, Ed. Walsh of the White Sox being the boxman who halted Cobb's advance against the Keeler record.

CHICAGO, Aug. 21.—One dollar for a hair-cut and fifty cents for a shave will be the standard price if barbers accept the suggestion of the Barber Supply Dealers' Association, a national organization which is holding its annual meeting here. A statement made public yesterday in relation to the suggested advance in rates said:

"Hair-cutting has always been done at too cheap a price, and most of our people feel that this is one branch of the work that should be paid for at a decent, respectable rate."

SOVIET RED TAPE MAKES PURCHASE OF SHIRT AN ORDEAL

PETROGRAD, Aug. 21 — The difficulties hedging in the existence of those who live in Petrograd during these times of disturbed regime and shortage in the necessities of life extend even to the ordinarily simple task of buying a shirt. To accomplish this takes time, patience, and determination.

First, one must find the shirt. He may visit forty shops before he finds one of the proper size. The question of preference of style is not to be considered for a moment, otherwise he will never get the shirt. Having found something that resembles that resembles a shirt of the proper size, he deposits a small payment to hold it.

The next thing is to convince his house committee—there is a commune in every apartment house in Petrograd now—that he needs a shirt. If the house committee passes favourably on the subject, it so reports to the precinct or district "soviety," or commune. This in turn reports to the commissary in charge of the distribution of shirts and kindred articles of clothing.

If the purchaser is quite lucky, after five or six days, he receives a duly signed and sealed permit to buy a shirt. Then he buys it, but ordinarily pays the Russian equivalent of $15 or $20. Some of the poorest quality may be found as cheap as the Russian equivalent of $5.

This restriction of purchase extends to all major articles of men's and women's clothing and shoes, and, recently, because of the linen and cotton goods shortage, was applied to handkerchiefs. Prices for everything are in proportion to the shirts, an ordinary suit of men's clothing costing the equivalent of $100.

Interesting Document Presented to the Conciliation Board in Session Here—An Itemized List.

THE STATEMENT

A cost of living schedule for a young woman was a feature of the documents presented by the representatives of the employees, before the Board of Conciliation and Investigation which is in session here, dealing with the dispute between the Canadian General Electric Company and its employes. A number of the employes are young women belonging to the Brotherhood of Electrical Worker's International Union. Two young women drew up separate schedules and they arrived at totals which varied less than $20. One total arrived at was $709.90, and the other $725.90 for a year. Boards of Conciliation have been used to statements on the cost of living based upon a man, his wife and three children's requirements. RECORD CROWD TAKES IN CHAUTAUQUA PERFORMANCE

Fourteen Hundred People Heard Talented Musicians Last Evening—Enthusiasm Reached a High Pitch.

Fourteen hundred people attended the Chautauqua last night when Miss Bertha Farner, one of America's most gifted singers entertained the audience with a programme of unusually high standard. All week Peterboro has been educating herself to an appreciation of high class performances and last night the enthusiasm of the audience reached its height both at Miss Farner's singing in the selections by the Tschaikowsky Quartet. Miss Farner's selections all of which were sung accompanied by the Tschaikowsky Quartet embraced solos from the great operas sung in Italian, popular war songs in English and a grand finale of the American, French and British National anthems the latter three sung in costume. A tribute was paid to the American allies when the entire audience rose at the singing of the American National anthem. At the conclusion of her performance she received such an ovation she completely collapsed.

Miss Farner will return in the winter with the Winter Chautauqua which is being arranged at present.

MISS BERTHA FARNER RELATES HER EXPERIENCES WITH HUN SYMPATHIZERS IN UNITED STATES

Chautauqua Artist Has Been Successful in Having Fifteen Germans Interned—An Interview With The Examiner.

Speaking last night at the Chautauqua, after winning the hearts of the audience by her magnificent voice, Miss Bertha Farner told of catching 15 German sympathizers and left her audience rather mystified as to just how she did it. Interviewed this morning, she told a graphic story of one case which she said was typical. "I hate the Germans," she said, "I connect all that is ignoble and bad with them and would kill one at sight and, having acquired a knowledge of the German language while studying in Germany, I am in a position to search them out. One experience o which I always think of with satsifaction, is the the internment of Proysner one of the 15 Germans I have handed over to the authorities. I had just returned to Chicago from Cuba and was staying at a small boarding house with my mother. One of my fellow boarders, Proysner by name, was undoubtedly a German both by name and by his accent which you can't disguise. While he never uttered plain pro-German sentiment he excused the autrocities of Kaiserism and softened the German deeds. I watched him but he was just clever enough never to let himself in too dep and denied his Fatherland by "being 30 years naturalized". One day passing his door I found he had the consummate impertinence to have a picture of Hindenburg in his wall and a bust of the Kaiser on his table. That finished me! Hardly restraining myself from smashing the Kaiser to pieces I waited for Proysner's return that night and unhappily for himself his first remark, referring to a military parade which was made in a down pour, he said, "It rained on your boys today", with that filthy German sneer. Two hours later he was in prison.

Later I landed my butcher in prison by drawing him out by speaking to him in German. Oh I hope to do lots now." Of her hatred for the German dating from her stay in Germany, Miss Farner would say little but her contempt for the Kaiser is scorching. "I've sen the filthy creature in Berlin and he looks like a miserable butcher," she said.

Likes Canadians.

Miss Farner is delighted to think she will return to Peterboro in the winter. She loves the Canadians "You're conservative and hard to move but when you do accept an artist your enthusiasm is sincerest and honest—in the States we're a little inclined to gush. Miss Farner has laboured hard for Red Cross and has sung twice a Sunday regularly for it and for the soldier boys since the opening of the Chautauqua.

BEANS GROWING IN FAVOR

Still Cheap Food by Comparison and Very Nutritious.

Demands made upon the country for foodstuffs forced the necessity for finding new foods and new uses for old foods, with the result that the farmers all over the United States to-day are turning their efforts to many crops that heretofore received but scant attention. One of the important crops now more extensively cultivated than ever before is the bean crop— all the different varieties of beans—and it is believed the yield this year will eclipse anything in the past. The yield last year was the largest even known. Beans are an excellent substitute for meat and are so used in many cases.

According to figures of the Department of Agriculture, the last crop of beans was about 15,000,000 bushels, an increase of 5,000,000 bushels over the normal crop. Beans have long been a staple food for the army and navy. On account of their high nutritive value they enter largely into the diet of men in the field. Beans are to be counted as a substitute for meat rather than for the cereals. They can well take the place of a meat dish on many occasions, and with them in the diet there is less need for meat.

Beans, like everything else in the food line, have increased materially in price since the war started. Formerly Americans were inclined to look upon beans as a cheap food, and even with the present high prices beans are among the cheapest foods in nutritive value. In caloric value one pound of beans is equal to more than five pounds of potatoes, one and a half pounds of sirloin steak, two pounds of round steak, one dozen and a half eggs, five pounds, or five pints of milk. The protein value of beans runs in the neighborhood of 22 per cent. and in soy beans as high as 46 per cent. With beans at 20 cents a pound, one cup of bean soup costs about a fifth of a cent and provides 184.76 calories. The place of beans in the world's dietary is expected to enlarge as the war goes on.

Don't Try to Be An Extremist

Stand With the Tolerant and Broad-Minded and Act Wisely.

It was remarked by Macaulay that when feeling runs high and parties align on any question, moral, religious, political or economic, the best men on both sides are to be found nearest to the dividing frontier. The extremists of all the factions always injure and often bring discredit on the cause which they espouse. Few things are better established than this, and recurring evidence thereof is found in the history of every nation. It is a principle of nature; and as the temperate zone separates climes which burn or freeze, so wisdom holds the debatable middle ground between the bitter and violent extremes, and virtue is only a just temper between propensities which are vices when indulged in to excess. Even Deific perfection, as Halifax argued in defending the tolerant via media he always sought to follow, is only the equilibrium of attributes no one of which could preponderate without disturbing the moral and physical order of the world.

We are evidently entering an epoch when America will be a storm centre and battlefield on which men who think themselves or call themselves reformers will make infuriate attacks on principles and systems heretofore regarded as cornerstones of stable States. The anarchistic vanguard of radicalism will challenge private ownership of everything, including the fruits of individual thrift and toil. The uncompromising reactionaries may oppose with equal vehemence all innovations and alterations of whatever sort in the existing order. The triumph of the one would bring Russian chaos on the country. The triumph of the other would give us a crusted civilization incapable of progress until shattered, as Prussianism is now to be, and swept away. Between these two extremes the thoughtful, prudent body of the people will be found, welcoming rational changes and withstanding others; clinging to the approved good and rejecting the manifest bad.

In the battle for prohibition we have a foretaste of what the later economic conflict is to be. We see the fanatic wing of one faction determined to impose its views and unenforceable laws upon the land. Gladly, in their rancorous intolerance of opposing opinions, would they give the principle of personal liberty its death blow. On the other hand, a greedy and depraved contingent would cheerfully see a billion-dollar brewing interest, freed from all restrictions, dominating the politics of the State. The one would destroy personal liberty. The other would make it an excuse for lawless license; and both would trample the rights or minorities, or of majorities also whenever by hook or crook they could.

Upon this, as upon all other questions, the wisest people in both the parties will be found nearest together. It is not prohibition that they want, but temperance; not particular religious forms, but Christian lives. To tolerant, broad-minded men of this type all the real progress of our race is due; and in all ages and on all great issues the furious, uncompromising extremists have been impracticable and dangerous to States. —Rochester Post Express.

Food Board Flashes

Ten chances to one you have never thought of using glucose in your kitchen, but the time has come when you are specifically asked to give it a trial. There is no question of the scarcity of sugar and glucose and its counterpart, white corn syrup, are among the best and most inexpensive substitutes at hand. The British Board of Agriculture and Fisheries has been recommending its use by private house holders for some time past. It should be used along with cane sugar in the proportion of one part of glucose to two of sugar. Practical experiment has shown that it can be successfully utilized in jam and jelly making, for canning, and also for general cooking purposes. Give it a trial.

Dawson and Shipman, seedmen, Cannington are the purchasers and the price per bushel will be about $12. During the season of 1917 Mr. Frank Warvill, of Brock township, from a self catch, received at the rate of $92.75 per acre from his crop.

Americans Are in Contact With the Germans

(United Press.)

(By Fred S. Ferguson.)

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMIES IN FRANCE, Aug. 21. —The French advance between the Oise and the Aisne is rendering the German line on the Vesle more difficult.

As the Boche line is swinging back east and south of Noyon, the enemy positions east of Soissons will become so pinioned that there is every possibility of them being forced to retreat before the Americans from the Vesle to the Aisne.

American patrols are in close contact with the Boches to detect the first signs of a withdrawal.

Oyster Bay to Stop Use of Automobiles as Dressing Rooms

Village Folk Shocked Too Often by Bathers at Harbour, Says Constable.

OYSTER BAY, L.I., Aug. 21. —The use of automobiles as bath houses by persons who come here to swim along the beaches skirting Oyster Bay Harbour has got to stop. Constable J. S. Thompson says so.

For many Sundays, the folk of this vicinity have been more or less shocked because bathers have been dressing and undressing in machines pushed close to the water, protected from the sight of passerby only by storm curtains, many of which have isinglass peepholes of somewhat too commodious dimensions.

Oyster Bay will not be shocked in the future in this manner, the constable promises.

Escaped Hurt Under Feet of a Runaway

What might have proved a very serious accident occurred Tuesday afternoon near the Grand Trunk crossing on Simcoe street. Messrs. White, Detective Newhall and C. R. Varnatte, while walking along the sidewalk, were run down by a runaway horse which had taken fright from a passing train. Mr. White was knocked down by the horse and lay prostrate underneath it but as a result of the quickness of Mr. Newhall in seizing the animal by the head and pacifying it Mr. White was able to roll out of his precarious position, and escaped without a scratch.

Mr. White is visiting Peterboro and district for a few days from Cuba where he is interested in the production of grapefruit.

He and Detective Newhall are old acquaintances having first met in Cuba same years ago. Mr. White is interested in extensive grape fruit groves at Bartle, Cuba, and is enthusiastic about the prospect of fruit growing on the island. He has many interesting stories of Detective Newhall and his captures.

AGED AMERICAN COAL MINERS RETURN TO WORK AS WAR AID

PITTSBURG, Pa.—In Mercer county, Pa., 150 mine workers who had retired on account of old age went back to work to help satisfy the urgent need of coal. They knew that every 9,000 ton cargo ship that slid down the ways of a shipyard had used up 16,000 tons of coal in its construction. They had learned that every 42 centimetre shell our boys fire at the Huns meant a consumption 900 pounds of coal, and they donned their old mine clothes and went into the fight as nobly as any youth who goes "over the top."

Now that America is not only preparing for war but actually in it and with no way out except the straight road to victory, American miners are doing more than any other class of men on earth to stop the arrogant Hun.

Have YOU any idea what that decision is costing you—even if you live? Of course if you die the cost is much GREATER.

The premium you would pay for $1,000 of insurance at age 60 WOULD BUY YOU nearly $4,000 of insurance at age 21.

The premium you pay for $1,000 of insurance at age 50 WOULD BUY YOU nearly $2,500 at age 21.

The premium you pay for $1,000 of insurance at age 35 WOULD BUY YOU $1,440 at age 21.

300,000 Men Brave the U-Boats for Us

¶ The men of the Merchant Marine have given loyal service—yes, and their lives—ungrudgingly and unflinchingly. They deserve the utmost we can do for them!

¶ The tragedy is that this splendid body of men is not recognized by governments, no provision is made for the relief of dependents—no separation allowance—no pension!

¶ It is left to public subscription to care for the widows and orphans. It is vital work our seamen are doing—for without the supplies and munitions carried by the Merchant Marine it would be impossible to keep our armies in the field.

No Government Allowance for their Dependents!

¶ 300,000 seamen of the Merchant Marine "carry on" in spite of the U-Boat and the floating mine. 15,000 have made their last voyage.

¶ One hundred and seventy-six merchant ships have been sunk since the war began, without leaving trace of ship, cargo or crew.

¶ All this is in the Allies' cause—it is for us! Isn't it the very least we can do, to take care of the widows and orphans, who otherwise will nurse their grief in poverty? Sooner or later, governments may make provision for this vital service, but until such time comes we have an unquestionable duty.

MILITARY MEDAL AWARDED TO THE LATE GUNNER T. L. CHAMBERS

The Award is Forwarded to Mother of Deceased.

Mrs. E. Chambers, 249 Park-street, has received word that her son, Gunner T. L. Chambers, has been awarded (posthumous) the Military Medal. The letter follows:

Kingston, Aug. 9

Dear Madam,—I am this date in receipt of your letter and as requested the Military Medal awarded your son, Gunner T. L. Chambers, is enclosed herewith, under Registered Cover.

The General Officer Commanding the District, in forwarding this decoration desires me to express the regret that obtains in the fact that this gallant soldier paid the supreme tribute to his duty before the honour which his bravery secures could be awarded to him in person, but is convinced that consolation may be sought in the fact that your son lived and died for the principle which his manhood stood for.

I am also directed by the Honourable the Minister to express his most sincere personal sympathy in the loss of your son, who proved himself to be such a gallant soldier.

It is therefore with mingled feelings of pride and sorrow that I am to request you to accept on his behalf, this sovereign proof of his love and loyalty, for as said by One, who in life and death was an example to all "greater love hath no man than this that he gave his life for his friend."

On my behalf please accept my sincerest compliments that you are the mother of so brave a soldier.

Yours very sincerely,
HARRY A. GENET,
Lieut. Colonel
A.A.G. Milt. Dist. No. 3.

The medal is suitably engraved and around the edge bears his name, rank and number.

WAR VETERANS' BAND TO PARADE ON SUNDAY NEXT

On Sunday, August the 25th the P. B.G.V.A. will hold their first annual decoration Sunday when the graves of their departed Comrades will be decorated. The Veterans will parade at the Armouries at 2.30 p.m. and will march to the Little Lake Cemetery, headed by their own band. A special feature of this parade will be the initial appearance of this band which has been recently formed under the direction of Comrade Bandmaster W. Hughes, and is making splendid progress. The band has been specially fitted with uniforms and all who are interested in the Veterans are asked to show their appreciation by turning out to their decoration on Sunday next.

All Veterans are asked to be on parade at the Armouries at 2 p.m. sharp, and to bring a small bouquet of flowers with them. Cars will be provided for those who are unable to march. It is particularly requested that every member of the G.W.V.A. make a special effort to attend this parade, and thereby honour the memory of those of our comrades who have completed their sacrifices, and though no longer with us in the flesh, are still with us in the spirit.

There will be a band practice tomorrow night at 8 o'clock at the G. W. V. A. headquarters.

Forgot to Pay His Board Bill

Indian by the Name of Shilling in Police Court This Morning.

Ephraim Shilling, an Indian, who was sauntering across the G. T. R. platform, was given an invitation to the police court by one of the members of the force. Ephraim boarded at the house of Mr. George Foster, Hunter street, and is alleged to have taken French leave, without paying his board, amounting in all to $16.20. He pleaded guilty to the charge.

"What are you going to do about it?" queried the Chief.

But Shilling didn't know what he would do. He left the employ of the Quaker Oats yesterday, and drew $19. Besides various articles he bought a new suit, costing $7.50, and has now only $10. He said that the J. R. Eaton Box Factory at Orillia owed him $10 for wages.

The case was adjourned until four o'clock this afternoon until Orillia could be communicated with.

STOLE AUTOMOBILE JUMPED BOARD BILL

TRAVELLED AS FAR AS PETERBORO.

Ottawa, August 21. — Frederick Martin and Russell Perrin, of St. Catharines, became seized with the wanderlust last week, and so that they might be enabled to travel in comfort, it is alleged they stole an automobile, with which they travelled as far as Peterboro. Here they swapped the car from another and received $75 to boot, and journeyed on to Carleton Place, where they stayed at an hotel for a few days but neglected to settle their bill upon leaving. This led to their undoing, as the irate boniface telephoned a description of the men to the city, and they were arrested as they were coming in. They will be sent back to St. Catharines where a warrant is out for them for the theft of the car.

Sacred Scrolls Now Replaced In Jerusalem

Sacred Torah Were Taken Into Exile For Safety From the Turks,

BRITISH SECURITY

Jerusalem, August 17. — Restoration of the Parchment Scrolls of the law to the various synagogues in Tel Aviv and Jaffa, was one of the interesting ceremonies which followed the British occupation.

These scrolls of the Law of Moses, which are all written by hand and are preserved in magnificently ornamented cases, some of them in solid silver, are the most sacred and holy possessions of every Jewish community. So when Djemal Pasha in his hostility to the Zionists, carried out the tyrannical evacuation of the bulk of the Jewish population of Jaffa, in April, 1917, the Jews carried with them these sacred Torah into exile, lest they should fall into the hands of the Turks.

These sacred scrolls had been carefully guarded by the Jews at Petach Tikvah (Mulebbis), and were brought back in solemn procession to Jaffa. A triumphant arch was erected at the northern confines of Tel Aviv, every house was decorated with flowers and bunting, and the whole of the Jewish population turned out en fete to meet the return of their sacred possessions. Jews came not merely from Jaffa, but also from Richon-le-Zion and the other neighbouring colonies.

The young men and the girls of the Macabee Athletic Association dressed in white clothes, with blue sashes and ties, maintained order and kept a pathway clear for the procession through the crowds. The procession was headed by an Australian military band, and the ceremony at the Triumphal Arch was attended by officers representing the military governor and by Dr. Weizmann and the members and officers of the Zionist commission.

The Haham Bashi (chief rabbi) of Jaffa, mounted a small dais near the Arch, and delivered an eloquent Hebrew address in which he recounted the hardships of the evacuation. He thanked and invoked blessings upon the British government, and the British army and expressed the hope that success would crown the efforts of the Zionist commissioners. The Jews desired to regenerate and build up Palestine, not merely for their own benefit, but for that of all its inhabitants whose friendship and help he invited. The re-establishment of the Jewish people in their ancient home in Palestine, he said, would be for the good of all humanity.

Then the shofar or ram's horn was blown and the scrolls were carried under canopies by the Chief Rabbi, Dr. Weizmann, and others, to the various synagogues to which they belonged.

In the afternoon the town of Tel-Aviv remained en fete. There were processions of school children crowned and decorated with flowers, the Yemenites carrying small lambs and goats on their shoulders, and bearing palms in their hands. Children sold flowers and confetti in the streets, the proceeds of which go to a fund started recently by the Zionist teachers for translating into Hebrew, English books and literature. In the evening the Macabees gave an athletic demonstration in the public gardens, and the proceedings closed at sunset with the singing of "God Save the King," and the Zionist national anthem, "Hatikvah," the Song of Hope.

Tan, Red or Freckled Skin is Easily Shed

To free your summer-soiled skin of its muddiness, freckles, blotches or tan, the best thing to do is to free yourself of the skin itself. This is easily accomplished by the use of ordinary mercolized wax, which of course can be had at any drug-store. Use at night as you use cold cream, washing it off in the morning. Immediately the offending surface skin begins to come off in fine powder-like particles. Gradually the entire outer scarf skin is absorbed, without the least harm or inconvenience. The second layer of skin now in evidence presents a spotless whiteness and sparkling beauty obtainable in no other way. One ounce of mercolized wax usually is sufficient to combave thefact emphasifiedl lyly lylld

UP GOES PRICES OF CARS, DOWN GOES THE STOCK

Up goes the price of automobiles. Down goes the supply of available cars in Canada. Very soon it will be impossible to buy a big new car in Canada.

Teh Ford Motor Co. have announced a new set of prices, which do not include the war tax charges. As compared with the former prices charged the new rates are:

	New prices.	Old prices.	Increaes.
Runabout	$660	$575	$85
Touring	690	595	95
Coupe	875	770	105
Sedan	1,075	970	105
Chassis	625	535	90

"This is due mostly to the general increase in the cost of labor and material," declared the sales manager of the company in Toronto. "The Ford is not alone in raising prices. All the other makes of cars have been going up.'

"There is considerable difficulty over the securing of material for the making of cars, but we have found that it is possible to get material in Canada that we had not thought of getting here, so that Canadian manufacture will go on, and we hope to keep on supplying the trade," he said.

Inquiry reveals that prices of other cars have been steadily soaring. There are few except the Ford car that can now be secured in Canada for less than $1,000, including the war tax, which dealers say really amounts to 14½ per cent., when the duty is added to the tax on the foreign sale price.

As for the larger cars, there are few of them for sale, and those few are held at high prices. The Hudson is selling at $3,150, which Hudson dealers say is the same price that has been maintained since the Government put the embargo on cars costing over $1,200. In Montreal the Hudson price is said to be $400 higher.

The Cadillac prices have risen from time to time, and the car is now quoted at $5,250 whereas is was $3,200 a year ago. This new price includes war tax.

The Packard which used to sell from $3,750 up, is now selling over the $7,000 mark.

"There are practically no big cars left on the market, except used ones," said one dealer. "In a few days they will be all cleaned up, so that only the small cars will be available, and the United States order to the manufacturers to cut down their manufacture of cars by 75 per cent. is going to affect the Canadian makers, too, because Canada is so dependent on the United States for motor material."

OLD BOTTLE OF WINE FOR LAST SURVIVOR OF CLUB

STILLWATER, Minn.—Five of the ten members of the "Last Man Club," formed in 1886 from the thirty-three surviving members of Company B, First Minnesota volunteers, sat about a carefully guarded bottle of champagne recently and speculated as to its fate. Donated by a member now dead at the formation of the club, the gold-topped bottle, kept in a bank vault here, except on the day of the annual banquet, the aniversary of the second battle of Bull Run, is to be opened by the last survivor.

Twenty-three chairs draped in mourning reminded the quintet that fate rapidly was deciding the winner of their unisue contest.

PRUNES IN THE ARMY

War Will Last So Many More Prunes, Say Soldiers.

Based on size "55," the prunes used by the army amounted to 1,100,000,000 or 20,000,000 pounds. With such a supply the needs of the army were adequately cared for during the past year.

Judged by the figures it's epicurean epic, for the prune occupies its high position on the soldier's bill of fare through merit. It has been proved, says the War Department, that the prune has food value, fruit value, tonic value and value as a confection. In fact the quartermaster's corps thinks so much of tis food attributes that the army's needs are figured out a year in advance and prior to the time the new crop is ready for harvest.

And in addition there's a saying among the kitchen police to the effect that the war will last exactly "2,185,000,153 more prunes."

The army used 1,012,816 cases of evaporated milk in the first seven months of the present year.

A Forty Per Cent. Reduction in Household Consumption of Sugar

Decision of the International Sugar Commission—The New Regulations.

A CROP SHORTAGE

(Special to The Examiner.)

OTTAWA, Aug. 21.—As a result of shortage in the sugar supply consequent upon the difficulties of transport from Cuba and Java, and the shortage of the beet sugar crop in the United States, the International Sugar Commission, after surveying the situation, has arrived at the conclusion that a forty per cent reduction in household consumption on this side of the Atlantic will be necessary.

Sugar regulations in Canada, it is stated, will therefore be strictly enforced. The new regulations will require the proprietors of public eating places to secure a sugar certificate by September 1st, and that the supply of sugar will be limited to a maximum of two pounds per ninety meals served, or sixty per cent. of last year's supply for the corresponding period until December 31st of this year. If sixty per cent. proves insufficient to allow two pounds for ninety meals in certain places, an extra certificate will be granted.

The export of sugar to any destination regardless of value is also prohibited except in the case of parcels addressed to soldiers overseas. Regulations now in force restricting the use of sugar in candy, ice cream, cakes, etc., are to remain in force, while the hoarding of sugar in homes is also strictly prohibited.

Question of Classification Again Before the Board of Arbitration

Patiently Striving to Find Common Ground for the Views of the Company and the Men—Is the Principal Demand in the Employees' List.

The C. G. E. Board of Arbitration turned again this morning to the perplexing question of the classification of the employees of the machine shop, and at the noon session had made but slight progress in resolving the differences between the company and the men on this particular point. It is really the crux of the dispute, and is the salient clause in the agreement which the employees submitted to the company for their approval as a sort of shop code of rules. While the deliberations have at times switched to other clauses, the question of classification has been the Banquo's ghost in the amicable discussions. It refuses "to down." This morning Mr. Harper proposed to the Board that the company select some factory expert to act with himself in visiting the shop and determining a basis of classification. He suggested that the company might appoint either Mr. Fred Bowden of the Bowden Machine Company, William Inglis, of John Inglis & Son, or Mr. Thomas Bate, of the Canadian Allis-Chalmers, the latter a branch of the C. G. E. Company.

Judge Snider, declared that he was unable to indicate a satisfactory solution of the classification problem and Mr. Merrick's well known talents were likewise balked. Mr. Bancroft, the representative of the employees could naturally indicate the way to light, but the Board as a whole still sought some basis that would satisfy both the men and the company.

At noon it was understood that Mr. Harper's proposal would be considered during the recess. The adjournment was extended until three p.m.

The issue behind the classification is largely a demand for higher wages for what the men call specialists, and whom the company dubs "handy men." The Machinists' Union asserts that while these men may not have served an apprenticeship in the trade, yet their long experience on a certain machine, for example, makes them as capable a workman on that machine as any of the recognized machinists.

Hence on these machines, it is maintained, the specialists are able to do the work of machinists. This gives rise to the contention that the employees should be paid for what they can do. And the demand is made for a classification that will fix the rating and the wages of these men.

The company has set forth in detail difficulties which, they say, preclude the adoption of the plan of classification, and there the issue stood at noon.

CONEY KISSLESS AS NO MAN'S LAND, IS NEW POLICE EDICT

Captain Sackett and Bachelor Aids Arrest Four Offenders, Warn Twenty-five.

NEW YORK, Aug. 21.—The death knell to spooning on the sands of Coney Island have been rung yesterday by Captain Byron S. Sackett, commander of the Coney Island police station, vigilant guardian of the public morals and bathing censor extraordinary.

Gratified at his success in practically ridding the beach of stockingless women and in raising the height of socks to within speaking distance of dimpled knees, Captain Sackett undertook to bring to an end the exhibitions of spooning of thousands who disport on the sands on warm days and have on occasion been so vigorous as to draw circles of amused onlookers.

Four arrests and twenty-five warnings were the result of the first day's crusade. And the crusade is to continue until Coney Island beach is as kissless as No Man's Land.

The momentous decision was reached by the Captain last Sunday when his own family, in strolling along the sands with him, were surprised and shocked by some sight they witnessed. Accordingly, as the eight o'clock platoon was preparing to leave the station in West Eighth street yesterday the Captain outlined his campaign and asked for volunteers.

Knowing from experience in chasing the bare legged damsels how hard it is to make a woman behave, none of the men jumped at the chance. Then Captain Sackett chose Policemen James Grady and Thomas Craddock, both bachelors.

They were ordered to lock up on charges of disorderly conduct any couples found hugging and kissing. Being unwise to the ways of women and not understanding clearly the relative degree of affection signified between osculatian and mere holding hands, the bachelores timidly asked if the gentle pressure of the digits was to be penalized. After weighty thought Captain Sackett decided that hand holders should be warned not to grow too affectionate—indeed not even to continue their outdoor sport of the moment.

Captain Sackett himself went to Brighton Beach to do his own sluething, sending the policemen in plain clothes to more plebian parts of the island. At West Twenty-fifth street they discovered a couple, in bathing suits, hugging and kissing. Further along, at West Thirty-seventh street, another couple was locked in a clinch or an embrace. At the station house both couples asserted they were engaged to be married and saw no impropriety in their acts. They will be arraigned to-day. Captain Sackett made no arrests, but issued ten warnings.

POSTPONE DRAFTS.

Voluntary Enlistments Satisfactory in Newfoundland.

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld., Aug. 21.—Because of the voluntary enlistments in the Newfoundland regiment, the Government of the colony has decided to postpone for six weeks the enrollment of men for further drafts. It had been planned to call a new class of recruits for duty on Sept. 1. The large number of enlistments is believed by officials to be due to the adoption of conscription which was voted by Parliament last May.

ENGLAND'S GRAIN CROP BIGGEST SINCE 1868
